The Safety Valve

In keeping with Instauration's policy of anonymity, most communicants will be identified by the first three digits of their zip code.

❑ I once worked at a woman's hospital. Only the hardest heart would not have felt a tug when frantic parents of a retarded offspring would beg, implore and beseech us to sterilize their child—only to collide with our standard rebuff: "No sterilization can be performed on anyone without the informed consent of the patient." In such cases the retardate is too looney to absorb the "information." So it's always, "No dice."

❑ London's Sunday Telegraph (June 8, 1997) published an article claiming that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle based his character, Moriarty, on Adam Worth, a German Jew who emigrated to America and later became a gentleman crook and charlatan in London. The Instauration columnist who signs himself Moriarty may want to reconsider his pseudonym.

❑ Since there are virtually no Jews engaged directly in agriculture in the U.S., isn't it an anomaly that the Secretary of Agriculture is Dan Glickman?

❑ America has become an extremely uptight society. Watch your language very carefully. Any joke will probably offend someone. Don't even think of smoking. Religious symbol on your desk? Someone surely will be offended. Better leave certain publications at home. Their careless display at the office could get you fired. So what's the big deal? Simply that in a country where everyone sues for millions at a drop of a hat, the possibilities for abuse are endless. If two women say you harassed them, do you think anyone would believe your denial?

❑ Gentiles often give their children Hebrew names like Joseph, David and Elijah. Jews often name their kids Norman, sometimes even Christopher. Demented goys in love with Israel may soon start naming their offspring Chaim, Moshe or Schlomo. Then surnames will be due for an overhaul. Sam Donaldson may end up as Sam Lipschitz before he dies.

❑ Isn't it time for Instauration to start a "White Lonely Hearts" column?"

❑ Thank goodness I married an American soldier who hated Jews, FDR and his interventionist White House gang.

❑ There is now a quarterly magazine called InterRace for interracial couples. A big black buck is on the cover with a brain-dead white female degenerate.

❑ I have had occasion to meet a few of my old acquaintances who have passed 50. Everyone of them is a miserable, lonely, pathetic basket case. Either they are single, divorced or married to an equally pathetic spouse.

❑ Muslims in countries like Iran and Asians in countries like China and Japan must be both puzzled and delighted as they watch the white world turning itself brown.

❑ When a white kills a black for whatever reason the white is usually described as a bigot or racist. On the other hand, when a black man kills a white woman, she is frequently called a prostitute.

❑ I feel that terms like Majority, white, British-American have become defeating. We need a stronger designation than "white" for our people. The time has come for us to be bold and purposeful. We should strive to bind together all white ethnics. I suggest we designate ourselves American Aryans. The use of the Hitleresque term will bring loud criticism from our enemies, but it may reawaken racial pride in thoughtful whites.

❑ I'm very glad Instauration published The Hatch (June 1997). Peter J. Lorden's poem was very well done. I liked it so much I clipped it and carry it in my billfold. I get the poem out and reread it now and again. The Hatch has helped my submarooned self sense "the limitless ocean" a bit more.

❑ I saw a scary TV talk show featuring some prominent judges who said the law is whatever judges say it is. If the law says "No," the modern judge may interpret it as "Yes." That's because society "has grown" and "Yes" is now more appropriate. The judges were indignant at the idea that they should be elected. Their views did not surprise me. Their arrogance did.

❑ Muslims bombed World Trade Center "as a blow against U.S. support of Israel." "U.S. concerned about missiles in Iran." Palestinians in Zoo City plan "violence against U.S. and Jewish targets around the world." Without any debate I am aware of, "our" government has decided to defend to the death a foreign country—Israel—against its many enemies. Why isn't the U.S. public permitted to debate the issue?

❑ A few weeks ago the front page of my daily newspaper had a giant photo of a Holocaust survivor piteously showing the tattoo on her flabby ancient arm and spouting the usual tear-jerking story about death camps. Instauration mentioned that 70.8% of Swedes are convinced the Holocaust happened. This percentage would probably be considerably less if the poll was taken in secret. At least subconsciously the average American is annoyed by nonstop Holocaust whimpering. One wonders if it's so certain it happened, why are all the daily sob stories necessary?

❑ A funny thing happened to the Republican Party when it won and retained Congressional majorities in 1996. It completely capitulated to President Clinton. Just one example: an incredible backdown on welfare reform. The pretense that we are a two-party state has all but been dropped.

❑ Warren Hoge, London bureau chief of the N.Y. Times, said on the Charlie Rose show that one of the consequences of the death of Princess Di "is that it shows how Britain is becoming less white." Rose nodded sagely, though Hoge's statement seemed like a non sequitur. It never ceases to amaze me how predictions of the white world becoming darker are always accepted as both inevitable, acceptable and beneficial.

❑ Instauration (Sept. 1997) had an article about two Hindu residents in Florida enslaving an Asian Indian woman. The New Republic recently had a long report about yet another way in which we are enriched by diversity—the multicultural defense. Seems that mud people can get away with most anything, even pedophilia and murder, provided it is their cultural norm. So it wouldn't surprise me if the Hindu couple walks.

❑ TV's exaggeration of black achievement is reaching absurdity. One cop show I saw featured a black police colonel under 30! In real life even affirmative action couldn't accomplish that.

❑ Time magazine says billionaire Hungarian Jew George Soros has big plans for the U.S. He's willing to spend millions to make sure our opinions are politically correct. Not only do WASP billionaires not bankroll the values that made them what they are, whatever money they do donate goes for the same causes as Soros's.

477

❑ The late Supreme Court Justice William Brennan asserted that the Constitution has no fixed meaning. He and other Justices tell us what the meaning du jour is. How is this different from totalitarianism?

022

❑ Flip on CNN and see a young, nattily-dressed Jewish man who looks like a Melrose Place extra. He's James Rubin, Asst. Secretary of State! Madeleine likes her Jews cute!

300

❑ In one of Clinton's speeches he had wonderful news for daughter Chelsea. By the time she is a granny, white people like her own family will be a minority in their own country. Imagine a white girl raising her hand in a class at Stanford and asking the professor why the President is so delighted she will live to see her kind reduced to a minority. What would be the prof's answer?

412

❑ Hollywood used to do its part in the battle against capital punishment with films showing innocent people wrongly convicted. But these are more sophisticated times. In films like Dead Man Walking and Last Dance, the bloody victims of admitted killers played by Sean Penn and Sharon Stone, respectively, are shown in gory detail. Our rulers want to make the point that when it comes to capital punishment guilt or innocence is irrelevant.

788

❑ Jewish hoof fetisher Dick Morris, at one time and perhaps still Clinton's closest political adviser, says that John Huang, a friend of the President and one of the Asian moneybags, is probably a spy. Anyone care? If Huang was a tobacco company executive, wow!

328

❑ Republicans pretend we will be out of Bosnia in 1998. Democrats say 1999. Both parties know neither date is correct.

488

❑ The history of military prowess is 99.9% masculine. This means nothing to our current leaders, military or civilian, who care far more about political correctness than preparing for a war they presume will never come. No more war. Stock market never falls. It's a wonderful life!

060

❑ A Jewish acquaintance of mine lectures on the Middle East situation to local services clubs, such as Rotary. I once asked him if it wouldn't be useful if the opposing view was presented. He indignantly replied that since his view was the correct one, no other viewpoint was required.

780

❑ Know what I love about Senator Helms? The insufferably smug press hates him. Anyone treating the Rathers, Brokaws and Jennings with the disdain they so richly deserve merits my respect.

077

❑ When affirmative action poster boy Dr. Patrick Chavis's patients started dying in droves, there was no denying something had gone badly wrong. The consequences of eased standards in so many other fields are less dramatic, less obvious, but no less disastrous.

300

❑ An Israeli widow demands someone pay for the 1972 Olympic Games killings in Munich and sues Germany for $25 million. Jews demand tens of millions from WWII-era insurers, billions from Switzerland for politically incorrect WWII neutrality. Jewish booze king Edgar Bronfman Sr. says Portugal is next on the Chosen's hit list.

Blade Runner: Prescient 1982 Flick

Blade Runner opened in movie theaters in the summer of 1982 just two weeks after Steven Spielberg's more heralded E.T., which went on to become the all-time box office moneymaker. Blade Runner, with a $27.5 million budget, took in $27 million at the box office on its first run—hardly a smash—yet it proved its worth in the long run. Almost every science fiction film made since 1982 has been influenced by its production design, photography and special effects. A new generation of fans has materialized and the film has spawned dozens of Web sites on the Internet.

All well and good, but what is it about Blade Runner that should attract the attention of Instaurationists? I doubt that the film's enthusiasts are a potential hotbed of new subscribers to the magazine. The connection is that the world of the future portrayed in the film is very close to the dystopian predictions made in this publication.

In Los Angeles, the film has become a cultural touchstone, as the film takes place in that city in the year 2019. When Angelenos speak of a "Blade Runner scenario," they aren't referring to the film's original screenplay. Rather, they mean the reality of life in Los Angeles is getting closer and closer to the dark vision of the film. And an integral part of that vision is the reality of white decline—in more colorful language, "a demotic polyglotism ominous with unresolved hostilities."[1]

> Ridley Scott's film, Blade Runner, which appeared in 1982. . .almost ten years later, remained so resonant that it had become a part of everyday speech in Los Angeles. All someone had to do was mention it, and you immediately knew where they stood about the future of the city.[2]

The film is based on Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep?, a 1968 novel by science fiction writer Philip K. Dick. The racial angle of the film is absent from the book, which involves a fallout-ridden, post-nuclear-war world where wildlife has vanished and most humans are sterile. The fertile few are eligible to participate in a space colonization program. All colonists are awarded an android to perform slave labor in the "off-world." The androids are virtually indistinguishable from humans but they have very short life spans. As long as they perform their appointed tasks, there is no problem. But rogue androids must be "retired." This is the job of Rick Deckard (Harrison Ford)—android hunter—or a blade runner, as the movie dubs him.

The mise-en-scène shifts the locale from San Francisco and Seattle to Los Angeles, which ushers in the Raymond Chandler 1940s undertones which are not in the book.

Raymond Chandler

Chandler's famed mystery novels are inextricably connected to Los Angeles—more specifically, the dark side of the palmy, sun-drenched metropolis. This is important because as late as 1976, Chandler biographer Frank MacShane could assert, "Los Angeles is the largest American city that is predominantly Protestant."[3] Indeed, its WASPy ethos was frequently remarked about by a number of writers. Joan Didion called it "The West Coast of Iowa." H.L. Mencken called it "Double-Dubuque."

Though founded in 1781, Los Angeles remained a backwater until the 20th century, when old stock Americans poured out of the Midwest and settled in the Los Angeles basin. After WWII, hordes of defense plant workers and servicemen, who had been stationed in Southern California, decided to put down roots. Sure, there had long been Japanese, Chinese, blacks and Mexicans—but in modest numbers. As a result, Los Angeles was 80% white in 1960—an enviable status and one that seems almost unbelievable today. By 1980 the city was only 40% white. In 1984, it was estimated that at least 85 languages were spoken by children in the L.A. School District (38 spoken at Hollywood High School alone) and 120,000 students were placed in the category of "limited English proficiency."[4] It goes without saying that the culture wars have not abated since then.

In Blade Runner, however, it appears that the culture wars are over and the Asians have won. This scenario might have seemed pretty far-fetched in 1982, but not so in 1997, as the global pundits now regularly ponder the fate of Hong Kong, the "emerging economies" of Asia and the 1.2 billion people (i.e., the world's largest market) in China.

Asian influence is dominant in Blade Runner, as the Los Angeles cityscape in 2019 is a hodgepodge of neon pictographs and Asians on bicycles are ubiquitous. The presence of Mayan-like pyramids in the skyline indicates a strong Mexican influence. Forget about English, forget about bilingualism. "Cityspeak," described as "a mishmash of Japanese, Spanish, German, what have you," is the language of a Latino cop played by Edward James Olmos, whose flashy clothing is perhaps a nod to the infamous zoot suits worn by Mexicans during the WWII years, when they frequently clashed with servicemen. Curiously in the Los Angeles of the future, Negroes are conspicuous by their total absence—no explanation offered! Most telling of all, blimp-like vehicles sport video advertisements for off-world immigration, "The chance to begin again in a golden land of opportunity and adventure, "which sounds like the sort of boosterism that characterized Southern California in its salad days.

Los Angeles in Blade Runner has little in common with the popular image of the metropolis—no more glitz or glamor. Imagine a petrochemical hell, such as you might see in South Philadelphia, around the Newark Airport or along vast spans of the Texas Gulf Coast, and you will be close to the Los Angeles of the film. Palm trees are nowhere in evidence. The city's famed sunshine is blotted out by haze, smog and rainfall. The "look" of the film can largely be attributed to one Syd Mead, who is given the unusual credit of "Visual Futurist." The dark vision of Raymond Chandler has become literal:

> If you mention Blade Runner here, you are greeted with a smirk. . . .Here the film is seen as darkly prescient of the downside of buzz words like "diversity" and "multiculturalism." The problem of white flight in Southern California is exactly like Blade Runner. They aren't moving off-planet, but to Washington or Oregon or Arizona. . . .What I keep hearing is, "It's getting to be Blade Runner out there." The bottom line is, with the crime and riots and the dramatic shift in the city's ethnic balance, the feeling is, "It ain't science fiction anymore. It's reality."[5]

In an Internet essay titled, "The Future of Our Discontents," William Timberman remarks:

> For anyone who continues to harbor doubts about the future of American empire, there is something deeply unsettling about the rain-soaked Los Angeles in which Blade Runner is set, something eerily familiar in its crumbling architecture and punked-out Third World inhabitants. I wonder how many people, picking their way through theater parking lots on a warm June evening in 1982, imagined for a moment that they heard thunder in the air behind them, or looked apprehensively for oriental characters on the exit signs as they started their cars and drove away.

Though overtly anti-racist ("skin job" is a racial slur of sorts directed against androids), the film has a covert pro-white theme that does not strike the viewer until the third or fourth viewing—though I'm sure that director Ridley Scott and screenwriters Hampton Fancher and David Peeples would strenuously deny that such was their intent. Blade Runner is not apt to mobilize picket lines à la Birth of a Nation, but pro-white sentiments, albeit subtle, cannot be denied.

One can't help but notice that the androids or replicants are all Nordic. One is a bit dorky, but the others are highly attractive. In particular the group's leader, Rutger Hauer, looks like one of those blond beasts Jews always like to cast as evil Nazis in WWII movies. The implication is that white people emigrating off-planet want their own kind as replicant servants. In real life, white folks hire browns and blacks to perform domestic duties and stoop labor because they work cheap and there's plenty of them. But suppose you could choose the race of your replicant slave? You'd probably pick the best-looking white model available—exactly what replicant hunter Deckard does! At the end of the film, when he heads for the hills with the radiant replicant named Rachel, it is almost like a return to the Garden of Eden. Like many a contemporary Angeleno, he has abandoned the diabolical City of Angels for a clean, green, prelapsarian environment that looks like the Pacific Northwest. Rachel's manufacturer[6] says she is "special." But is she special enough to bear children, to be the new white Eve for Rick Deckard, the new white Adam?

While we wax fundamental, we should also mention the film's underlying theme: What does it mean to be human? The question is inevitable when human beings are confronted with man-made creatures that are virtually indistinguishable from their own kind. The question, though never specifically verbalized, runs throughout the movie. Ironically it is the replicant leader whose hunger for life at the end of his abbreviated span ("the light that burns twice as brightly burns half as long") stands in contrast to the soulless, robot-like Asian hordes in the streets. The message is that even a white replicant is more "human" than a nonwhite. In the world of the future, why are all replicants, as far as we can tell, produced from a Northern European template? Is it a realization that people of color are a dime a dozen—if not worthless, at least worth less? Are white people more precious—and therefore more marketable as replicants? We may posit that a corollary theme of the movie is: What does it mean to be white? Spiritually? Emotionally? Intellectually? Romantically? Every which way?

In a homogeneous society, the question need never be asked. In a white majority society with significant numbers of minorities, the question arises and is asked more frequently as the numbers (and types) of minorities mount. Note the tentative attempts at white studies courses in college curricula. Compare and contrast—everyone's favorite theme topic—must inevitably be applied to races in a multiracial society. The color-blind society is truly a piece of science fiction.

With a nod to Madison Grant, let us hope we don't have to wait for the passing of the great race, as happens in the elegiac Blade Runner, before we finally have an answer to the question of what it means to be white.

Miami on the Skids

The city of Miami is sinking fast. The reason may not be apparent to the throngs of tourists whose experience of the city extends only from the airport to the expressway to the Port of Miami where the cruise ships line up. To anyone who lingers a while, however, the reason is obvious: too many people of color—or too many poor people, which amounts to the same thing. Every day for a week, I rode a bus from the Civic Center district through the Overtown area, which was the scene of rioting some years ago. Any time of day or night, the streets are filled with loitering Negro males leading totally purposeless lives. It's as though such a thing as work was never invented.

Getting to work certainly isn't a problem in Miami. The public transportation system is superb. Buses run frequently and the trains are clean, swift and efficient—but half empty, even during rush hour. A dearth of jobs is one problem. Businesses are avoiding Dade County, in which whites are now a minority. (Miami itself is 60% Hispanic out of a population of 370,000.) Why would a businessman set up shop in what is, for all practical purposes, a Third World city, if he has to pay First World wages? Might as well head for someplace where the minimum wage is 50¢ an hour.

Municipal mismanagement and corruption is so bad in Miami that a couple of months ago there was talk of disincorporating the city and letting Dade County take it over. A vote in September, however, kept Miami intact. Given the city's physical layout on Biscayne Bay, one can't help but feel that the city would have been worth fighting for 20 years ago. Now it's too late. Even so, the subtropical verdure is impressive, especially in late summer when the rest of the nation is parched.

If you are well-to-do, there are plenty of high-rise apartments on Brickell Avenue and a number of small islands (keys) featuring elegant homes with restricted access. If you are poor, the climate is salubrious for living on the streets—plenty of that in evidence downtown just steps away from the tony Bayside shopping mall. But if you are middle class, there is no place for you. It doesn't take a great deal of imagination to see that the numerous streets with deteriorating bungalows and burglar-proof iron window bars were probably once very pleasant, albeit modest, neighborhoods.

Miami Beach is another story. Depending on where you go, it can be either a little slice of heaven, Havana or Brooklyn. The South Beach area, the oldest part of the island, has been refurbished. Most of the old art deco hotels have had a facelift. Youth is the order of the day. Hordes of party animals, volleyballers, rollerbladers, bicyclists and topless sunbathers (yes, it's legal on the beach) compel the wayward traveler to believe that South Beach is now the perfect place to prolong one's adolescence.

But youth is not the only dynamic on Miami Beach. As in Miami, Cubans are a major influence. Tourists from Europe and Latin America are so plentiful, the English-speaking American tourist almost feels like a stranger. Thanks to cheap air fares on the New York-Miami route, Gothamites are also well represented at the beach—lots of guys who look and talk like a young John Travolta. Homosexuals are another force to be reckoned with—not surprisingly, since fixing up old buildings and opening up trendy restaurants and shops is a gay thing. The rebirth of Miami Beach might not have happened without their influence and money.

Of interest to the Instaurationist is the number of blond, blue-eyed Spanish speakers. The combination of Nordic looks and Latin effusiveness is not without charm. Coming from Texas, I sometimes forget that brown skin is not necessarily a concomitant of the Spanish language. This is not to say that the mestizo/mulatto factions are underrepresented. Public transportation from Miami brings over busloads of Puerto Ricans, Dominicans and Colombians every day to work in the hotels and restaurants. On weekends they overpopulate surf and sand with their broods.

As for the famed Jews of Miami Beach, even though the casual tourist may never encounter them, they are still there. Walk around the residential areas away from the beach and you will see them by the carload. Ride the buses and you will see Holocaust memorials and numerous synagogues (in particular one congregation on 17th street was for Jewish Cubans—in South Florida, the Chosen people indeed!). As in New York City, Jews are easy to recognize by their traditional physical characteristics—a body (often slightly hunched over) that looks as though it was put together out of spare parts, a picklepuss and, as often as not, gaudy accessories or jewelry. Like their counterparts in Zoo City, they are surrounded by the darker races which their social and political philosophies promoted. They don't appear to be overjoyed by the rainbow coalition they helped to create in South Florida. They almost look—dare I say it?—dispossessed!

J.H.

The Tangled Threads of Minority Threats

A recent letter from an Instaurationist wondered at the magazine's concern with Jews. The writer, who signed himself XAMAX, makes several observations of interest: among them, that Instauration has lately been neglecting the darker races ("muds") in favor of Jews; that Jews are "dying out even faster than other whites"; that "it is very obvious that Negroes are the threat." XAMAX hazards the guess that there is an unspoken contradiction between the editor's focus on Jews and his readers' interest in, well, muds.

Reading XAMAX, this columnist was inclined to snicker, sit back and await the backlash from Instaurationists who recognize how the Jewish question, the Negro question, the "mud" question and even the Palestinian question dovetail. No doubt by now there has been a thunderous riposte from affronted readers who recognize that certainly at this time Jews no less than Negroes are a threat to the American Nation and our racial kin and kind everywhere.

The two columns on "Rebels and Revisionists" that appeared in this space earlier this year recognized that there is pretty much of a deep gulf between these two groups of racially conscious Majority members—Rebels, with their Southern affinities, and the more Northern and ethnic Revisionists. I wrote: "The chief focus of Rebel watchfulness has been the Negro, and his white 'benefactors'. . ." As for the Revisionists, "their chief incubus has been the Jew." To be sure, there is probably much overlap: Rebels wary of Jewry, Revisionists well aware of the consequences of Negro integration. But if there is any substance at all to XAMAX's hunch that for most Instaurationists, "anti-Semitism is a quaint luxury," his intelligent letter deserves a careful response.

Perhaps unnoticed among the older contingent of the Majority hardcore, there may well have developed something of a generation gap between Majorityites. Those of us who were politically sentient in the 1960s and before recall vividly the evidently seamless alliance between Jews and blacks. Those of us who know only the past three decades have experienced one media-blazoned struggle between Jews and African Americans after another: over affirmative action, over neighborhood control, over anti-Semitism, over Israel, and over Afrocentrism.

We live in a time when it has become obvious that Negroes are a threat, if not the exclusive threat. But to understand why Instauration and a good many Instaurationists look upon Jews as a threat, it's worth looking back to a time when the threat wasn't so obvious.

In Plessy v. Ferguson (1896), the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the doctrine of "separate but equal" and thereby seemed to complete the rollback of Reconstruction that had begun two decades earlier. This was a time when for most Americans the careers of Booker T. Washington and George Washington Carver, outwardly deferential and humble to a fault, represented the highest blacks could rise or wish to rise in the social order. For Negroes who got out of line, there was rough and ready chastisement at the end of a rope.

Booker T. Washington Monument. His popularity has dimmed.

By 1910 two soon-to-be-influential organizations were battling for Negro "civil rights." Both of them—the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Urban League—were in large part founded, funded and led by Jews.

In the first half of this century, the NAACP was the chief spearhead of the legal offensive aimed at achieving integration. Chaired and financed by Joel Spingarn, lavishly funded by Jacob Schiff and Paul Warburg and aided by the likes of Felix Frankfurter, the NAACP was ready to challenge segregation. With a strategy devised by Jewish attorney Nathan Margold, the group began winning case after case in federal courts in the 1930s and 40s. Of the six lawyers who signed the brief in Brown v. Board of Education, five were Jews.

The Urban League, with a lower profile than the NAACP, focused more on social work than direct attacks on the color line. But it, too, was heavily dependent on Jewish managers and contributors. Its first chairman was Edwin Seligman. Felix Adler, Lillian Wald, Abraham Lefkowitz and Julius Rosenwald sat on its board.

When, in the 1960s, the focus began to shift from federal to Southern courtrooms, then to Northern streets, newer civil rights groups—the Congress of Racial Equality, the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference—took the lead. Each of these organizations was heavily dependent on Jewish contributions. In 1967, after SNCC published an article attacking Israel in its newsletter, financial support from Jews and whites all but dried up. CORE, too, experienced a catastrophic drop-off in Jewish contributions after one of its organizers criticized Der Führer for not killing enough Jews.

As for the SCLC, Martin Luther King's group, it remained in the good graces of U.S. Jewry. The Reverend himself was an enthusiastic booster of Israel and was utterly dependent on the fundraising abilities of Stanley Levison, his closest white adviser, whose alleged Communist Party ties were the ostensible reason FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover so dogged King. (Not as well known as Levison's Red links was his fundraising for the American Jewish Congress.)

It is evident that the five major "Negro" civil rights organizations, the five that have done most to foist "integration" and all its works upon us, were essentially Jewish entities. Given more space, one could conjure up many more Jews who led and won the "equality" fight—anthropologists like Franz Boas and Otto Klineberg who supplied the Warren Court with its "scientific" rationale; lawyers like William Kunstler and Arthur Kinoy; martyrs like Michael Schwerner and Andrew Goodman; plus a host of Jewish financiers.

The point here is that circa 1910 was a time in our national history when it seemed that the Negro question was settled to the satisfaction of the Majority, and even to a majority of blacks. Thereupon a numerically insignificant segment of the population pitched in and organized black resentment. Jewish contributions were disproportionate, and probably central, in winning equality and integration as a matter of law and policy. Whoever would dismiss the Jewish threat in preference to concentrating on the Negro menace would do well to keep the Jewish vector in mind.

MORIARTY

Zionism and Oil

In selecting Palestine as the site of their homeland, the Chosen have bitten off more than they can chew and have saddled themselves with a tiny, though world-class, enemy whose memory seems as long as Western man's is short. Assuming that the flea-bag natives of flea-bag Palestine would go gracefully into the middle distance, the Chosen manufactured enemies among the longest-hating peoples in the world. In a sense, however, Jews should not be faulted for their miscalculation, given their successes with foreigners like ourselves, save for that bumpy ride they received when they were briefly herded aboard Adolf Hitler's wagon.

Chosenite scheming throughout the late 19th and early 20th century turned into what really amounts to a rather boring routine of international conquest involving no more than (1) learning the language, (2) getting control of the courts, media, medicine and money, (3) manufacturing a synthetic culture that is best manipulated by its inventors and that mortally weakens the folk of the host nation.

By winning in North America, the Chosen may have become dangerously overconfident, even leading to the inclination to showboat by coming up with that colorful bit of detail called minorityism—an invention nominally aimed to benefit the dark-skinned hordes, but in actuality crafted to advance the position of you-know-who. Minorityism gained for the Chosen entrance to the nation's elite colleges, its fine residential neighborhoods and the most lucrative of its professions. Minorityism made compliant and complacent suckers out of the rest of us and welfare kings out of our dark-skinned Kongs.

With the Palestinians, however, the spell has been broken. The Chosen now find themselves locked in mortal combat with a people, though overwhelmed, outgunned and certainly outspent, who vow never to willingly submit to Zionist conquest. After the Jews and the American troops in the Middle East have given up and gone home, the Palestinians will still be there, their culture still in place. A great moral victory would have been won, the kind of victory that could propel the Palestinian people to historic greatness.

What, then, of Uncle Sucker, who was bulldozed into supporting the foolish adventure of Zionism? Alienated from the central sources of petroleum reserves, running out of oil on his own soil and now the everlasting enemy of any state that allows its foreign policy to be dictated by Zionists, Uncle Sucker will be placed in the position in which Japan found itself back in the winter of 1941—forced to take foolish risks to secure a few barrels of expensive oil from distant wells.

Already we import half the oil we consume. In 15 years we will be importing two-thirds. The cost will become an everlasting drain on our economy. Short-term disruptions to world oil supplies will become national disasters for the U.S., plunging the gross domestic product into a tailspin and sending millions more workers to the poorhouse.

There is no solution to this dilemma in domestic production because American oil costs 12 to 20 times what it costs to produce Arab oil. Realistic U.S. foreign policy would be to recognize the Palestinian position and send the Zionists packing. But it won't happen for all the reasons that Instaurationists know all too well. With our political gonads held firmly in the hands of the Chosen, Congress can make no move in the Middle East until it gets the green light from Tel Aviv.

Star of the New World Order

Having done a "reform" number on the former Soviet Union, Mikhail Gorbachev has now been thoroughly laundered and assumed into the New World Order as one of its most revered elders. Anointed and appointed by various international foundations, non-governmental organizations and supranational oligarchs to help manage far-reaching reforms in U.S. global governance, Gorbachev is enthusiastically and financially supported by Maurice F. Strong, a Canadian oligarch, who serves the downtrodden masses as a member of the UN Commission on Global Governance and Senior Advisor to UN Secretary General Kofi Annan.

Strong, himself a successful capitalist, international financier and meddler in the manner of a Soros, the Rockefellers and the Rothschilds, backs mostly socialistic One World causes for the great unwashed. At one time he was closely associated with the late John J. McCloy, who, in addition to being a distinguished member of the Truman Administration, helped establish the World Bank and was a high-ranking partner of the law firm that represented Rockefeller business interests. Strong's cousin, by the way, was Anna Louise Strong, a prominent Marxist and onetime member of the Comintern.

Today, Mikhail Gorbachev resides as an honored guest in the U.S. He is reported to be a member of the Trilateral Commission and a Knight of Malta. In 1989 Gorbachev and the main "architects" of perestroika (Shevardnadze, Yakovlev) supposedly met in Moscow under the auspices of the Trilateral Commission and pledged in Masonic terms to work for the good of the "Architect of the Universe."

Gorbachev's value to the New World Order was rewarded by his appointment as president of the Green Cross International (Croix verte internationale), headquartered in Switzerland. The organization was founded in 1993 by the Global Forum of Spiritual and Parliamentary Leaders at the UN Conference on Environment and Development. Its guiding principles are to promote global change and pressure humanity to rethink its relationship towards nature; achieve a sustainable balance between environment and development; encourage a dialogue between economists and ecologists; implement Green Cross programs; and bring the world's decision-makers together in grassroots movements.

Maurice Strong, whose global interests parallel those of Gorbachev, participated in Gorbachev's State of the World Forum in San Francisco in 1995. Strong's organization, Earth Council, and Gorbachev's GCI are currently developing a new Earth Charter for presentation to the UN General Assembly.

The irony and cynicism involved in the appointment of Gorbachev, the last General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, where the people have never had anything to say about government, to head up such a noble sounding organization as the Green Cross International cannot be lost.

The former General Secretary manages to influence political events in Russia and East Europe through the University of Calgary-Gorbachev Foundation Trust Fund, established in March 1993 by the University and the Gorbachev Foundation in Moscow. Its mandate is to encourage joint projects between Canadian and Russian institutions which will contribute to the reform process in Russia.

Busybody Gorbachev

Funding for the UCGF has been provided by the Canadian International Development Agency, whose founding director is Maurice Strong, through the Technical Assistance Program for Russia, Bureau of Assistance for Central and Eastern Europe and revenues generated by activities of the University of Calgary, with advice and direction provided by the UCGF Board.

While Mikhail Gorbachev is still despised by the Russian people for his political mismanagement, which culminated in the demise of the U.S.S.R. as a superpower, he has been widely acclaimed from other quarters for his botched reforms. Most importantly, he has gained the esteem and appreciation of the Jewish world community. The Jerusalem Fond, dedicated to a "renaissance of the Jewish people," has honored him with the King David Award for "freeing" Soviet Jews and working to end anti-Semitism in the former U.S.S.R. Previous Award winners were Steven Spielberg, Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher.

Just recently in the august St. Pauls Church in Frankfurt, Germany, Gorbachev was the recipient of another international award (cynics might say payoff) in recognition for his contributions to a New World Order. Former German President Richard von Weizsäcker presented him with the Budapest Club Award, established in 1993 by the Hungarian philosopher Erwin Lazslo > for his services in introducing perestroika and new thinking that has given a vigorous impulse for further global changes. The introduction of your views in 1991 was the basis of radical changes throughout the world and furthered international relations free of ideological baggage.

In accepting the award, Gorbachev said: "My ideas which were begun in the U.S.S.R. with perestroika remain valid today despite the ineffectiveness of the subsequent reforms."

What could possibly be sinister about Strong's, Gorbachev's or even Vice President Gore's commitment to such an inspiring cause as saving the planet through world environmental programs? First and foremost must be concern for the loss of national sovereignties through UN and supranational programs managed by supporters of the New World Order and controlled by an international oligarchy.

An even greater danger has been cited by Natalia Grant, doyenne of American Kremlinologists, who warns that the practitioners of International communism did not disappear with the collapse of the militant Soviet brand. They now work towards the same end under different auspices—world governance through environmental control. To quote Ms. Grant (Insight, May 26, 1997):

> I'm going to make you think I'm insane, but the effort [towards world Communist domination] still exists, having changed only its mode of action. Before, they had the idea that they would cause a revolution from below, and all the governments would topple. Today they're working from another angle. Instead of pressure from below, they're applying pressure from above.
>
> One of the principles of communism that they're trying to achieve is to bring non-Communists under Communist influence. By creating a movement, let us say, on the environment, they will bring in a lot of people who are sincere environmentalists. But they will have Communists in key positions of the movement who will influence the innocent to a certain extent and work to change their ideas.
>
> With the end of the cold war, the Communist slogans have changed once again. From the fight for peace, it has become the "fight for the environment."

White Flight from the Plains

Major demographic changes are sweeping through our nation at present. The net result of these massive population shifts is that whites are now on the list of endangered species.

This was brought home to me—again—by an article in the June Atlantic entitled, "Slow Death in the Great Plains," by Harlow A. Hyde. The lead-in sentence reads, "A sizable swath of the country's heartland is undergoing a severe drop in births that, if it continues, could empty many small towns in just one generation."

The area suffering this reverse baby boom consists of 279 counties in Wyoming, Montana, most of the Dakotas, three-fourths of Nebraska and half of Kansas.

Since the region has been underpopulated for many decades, the present exodus may lead in one more generation to ghost towns. It's difficult to comprehend how sparsely populated these 470,000 square miles are. They average only six people per square mile. One of the very few populous areas is Hall County (NE), a center of trade which has only 91 people per square mile. In contrast, New Jersey has 1,100.

Outside of American Indian reservations, virtually all of this core of America is populated by whites. The small towns that service the hard-working farmers and ranches are well-run communities where personal safety and security are a given, circumstances that prevailed in most of America until the 1960s.

The disappearance of whites in the Great Plains is a microcosm of what is happening, not only in the U.S. but also in Europe. Whites as a percentage of the population declined from 88% to the present-day 73%. Because of birth patterns and immigration, the downward trend is accelerating.

Since 1965, when the immigration laws were changed, millions of Third Worlders have poured into the U.S., changing, literally, the face of the country, particularly in California, Florida, Texas and New York. The birthrate of blacks and browns is significantly higher than that of whites, making it a major contributor to the changing demographics.

Our liberal masters, who changed the immigration laws and put in place the Great Society, pays women, mostly minorityites, to have children. They contend present immigration and welfare laws are fitting and proper. Our masters further believe that it is both humane and moral to turn the U.S. over to Third World people fleeing abject poverty, crime, massive corruption and primitive economics in their quest for the good life. (It would, of course, be politically incorrect to point out that the immigrants are fleeing conditions they themselves created.)

An interesting question is what will happen in this country after most whites are gone? We have excellent examples of what to expect by observing areas in the U.S. where whites have already fled because of conditions created by minorities. East St. Louis, Detroit and Gary are dramatic examples of minority rule. Washington (DC) also provides a dramatic indication of what to expect after whites have left the stage.

It's saddening to watch white Americans fade into the mists of time. I must agree, however, with those who say, if whites don't have the will or the intelligence to defend themselves, perhaps it's time they call it quits.

Jewish Charlatan

One of the leading pseuds of the 20th century was Bruno Bettelheim, Holocaust survivor, who exerted undue influence over contemporary psychiatry, even though his reputation was built on a formidable list of fabrications, wild guesses and outright lies that extended from his early days in pre-Anschluss Austria to his suicide in Chicago in 1994.

When Bettelheim arrived in the U.S. after WWII, he claimed to have been a member of Freud's inner circle and had three summa cum laude doctorates in psychiatry, philosophy and the history of art. (He had only one B.A. in philosophy). In no time he set himself up as an iconic guru in the field of children's disorders, particularly autism, and was hailed as a sort of wonder worker by the media. The N.Y. Times couldn't praise him enough.

It didn't take long for some of his colleagues to put him down as a typical Jewish self-promoting fraud, like his alleged master Freud. But the media mind-benders couldn't resist extolling him, even after his death. It was the same treatment given to Freud, Boas and similar Jewish witch doctors. The more they turned out to be wrong, the more they were eulogized.

Frenetic Black Gal

The American Spectator is a self-proclaimed right-wing monthly that often comes close to being a tabloid. A little louder and a little more fearless than the National Review, it is the brainchild of a gift-of-the-gab Irish American, R. Emmett Tyrrell, who is not afraid to wander in the shadier alleys of current events, such as Clinton's sordid encounter with Paula Jones and the suicide of Vincent Foster. Unfortunately, like practically all editors of acceptable journals, right- or left-wing, Tyrrell sinks to his knees when approaching the topic of Israel.

The May 1997 American Spectator reported a black woman's rampage in Washington (DC) that most of the media diplomatically bypassed. One evening Holly Wilson practically went berserk when for some reason her roommate wouldn't answer her knocks, possibly because Holly came home rather late. For some reason she took out her frustration on the residents of an adjacent apartment, who offered to let her use their phone. When she tried to break break down their door, she received a spray of Mace, which made her even more unruly. After the building manager arrived on the scene, Holly proceeded to break her nose. The raging Negress's excuse to the police was that one of the whites had uttered a racial slur. Her lawyer explained to the judge that she was a Harvard grad and worked for the Clinton-Gore political machine. The judge let her go with a couple of small fines and unsupervised probation for a few years. A white who did half as much would not have gotten off so lightly.

Revered Cop Killer Dies in Mexico

Our local lib-min rag, the San Antonio Express-News, fell all over itself in grief for Ricardo Aldape, the convicted murderer of a white Houston cop, who drove his speeding car practically up the tailpipe of a tractor-trailer in northern Mexico, dying in the process. Aldape was an illegal alien when he committed the vicious murder back in 1982. This is why all the moaning and groaning is so strident here in South Texas. Missing an appointment with the lethal needle by only hours (twice), Aldape remained on death row for a dozen years until a lachrymose federal judge ordered his release. (Funny, the local media had not a single word of sympathy for the dead gringo cop or his family. It seems the white pig shouldn't have interfered with Aldape's robbery. Served him right!)

The Mexican villain turned hero received a Roman Triumph back home, was flown to Mexico City on the Mexican president's jet, made a bucket of loot appearing in a Mexican soap opera and was on the verge of having his life story made into a movie when his lead foot sent him to an even hotter place than Mexico. Too bad! The movie would have been a smash hit in the Southwest, Chicago, Saginaw and other centers of Mexican life in gringoland.

One courageous local columnist had the nerve to mention that Ricardo was carrying a concealed pistol the night of the murder, that a mountain of evidence pointed to him as the triggerman and that he had a long history of crime. His sole defense was that a companion killed in the shootout with Houston police had been the murderer. The jury didn't buy it and Rick spent anxious years waiting for liberalism's minions to kick in and save him, which is ultimately what happened.

You can just bet that quite a few Mexicans now believe their boy really did the dastardly deed and that divine retribution had taken place there on that lonely stretch of road in northern Mexico. Mexicans are a very superstitious people and fear of an avenging God should help to quell a lot of brown racism down in the land of the cacti.

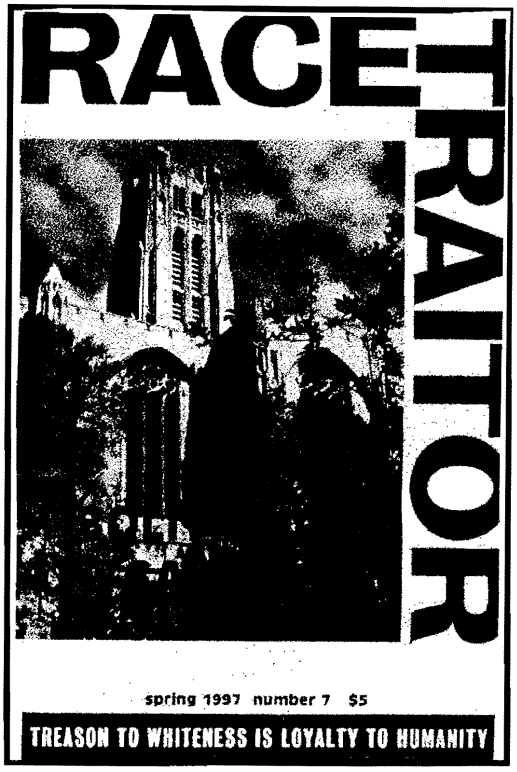
Abolitionists of Whiteness

First they say that through no fault of their own they are considered unequal, so they scream for equality. Then, once they have "equality," they start screaming for special privileges. When they get them, they begin to treat other peoples as unequal, all while mounting a cacophony of hatred against their former "oppressors." Now they have started something called "White Studies" and argue that being white is the same as being evil. So they call for the elimination of whiteness and all its works.

As their antiwhite racism increases, the objectivity that never was is transformed into the homicidal feelings that always were. The final step in this process is pure unabated ethnic cleansing, fueled by an unspoken call, not only for the abolition of whiteness, but for the abolition (genocide) of the white race.

Whiteness Studies are already in place in Berkeley (where else?). At a recent conference there the question arose, what to do about it? One answer was to develop an action plan to fight "white privilege."

A group at Harvard (where else?) that is studying whiteness wants to abolish it. To accomplish this objective it was recommended that whites be persuaded to turn against and betray their racial kin. The group's journal is called, appropriately, Race Traitor. White women are en- listed on the basis that the disease of whiteness is confined to white males, since only they are guilty of paternalism.



The founding father of the anti-whiteness movement is not a black or Asian as might be expected. He is someone called Noel Ignatiev, who says he is not a Jew, but "has a Jewish background." No surprise that the antiwhiteness campaign is led by a person who belongs to a population group that is presumably white, whose activities all throughout history can best be described as antiwhite. To put it another way, Jews have long been our race's fifth columnists.

James Baldwin, the Negro homo novelist, once wrote, "As long as you think you are white, then there is no hope for you." Sooner or later whites must learn that there is no hope for them if they stop thinking about being white.

Different Types of Immigrants

My favorite Latino was complaining to me the other day about the insidious racial intolerance shown by whites he once knew down on the Texas border country of his youth. Whites, he tells me, are nothing short of the Devil's Evil in racial elitism. "Too bad," I responded, "Perhaps this old U.S. of A. isn't such a great country after all." Though I was forced to maintain the restraint demanded by a federal government office environment, these unspoken words more or less hung in the office air: "If you don't like things as they are, why not try somewhere else?" Because I didn't empathize with "the pain" of his childhood experience, I am now, in his eyes, just one more example of a Texas Anglo, an enemy of the noble brown man and, by extension, a danger to the African American who sits in the next office.

Frankly, I've never thought of myself in such hyperbolic terms. In point of fact, I am not one of those hated and disparaged Anglo Texans. Far from it. My grandparents came to these shores in steerage. My family's "estate" was a 100-acre hardscrabble farm up in the Pennsylvania hinterland, not far from the grimy terror of anthracite mines. The school I went to was built and paid for by Anglos who had settled the region in colonial days.

To be sure, we immigrants from Europe worked hard for what we got. Sometimes it was not enough. But let's never forget that what we got was quite a bit more than what we had back in the Old Country. And, more often than not, what we got was exactly what the Anglo workers were getting.

The newcomers from Europe imparted bits and pieces of their own interesting culture to this Anglo land. In recent years, however, the notion of "immigrant" has been too often associated with such adjectives as "illegal," "criminal" and "unemployed," terms tied much too closely to public welfare, drugs and social dysfunctionality. In days gone by immigration took place only after extensive investigation and documentation certifying to one's upstandingness. New arrivals would need the okay of a local police department, one's pastor and even one's employer. Oddly enough, for Western Europeans these requirements have not changed. A relative who immigrated from Germany in 1974 found herself obliged to undergo the strictest scrutiny at the U.S. Consulate in Frankfurt. (Could it be that the Chosenite racial identity of the Consulate officer then on duty had something to do with the rigorous routine which was imposed?) Where the system has been loosened, of course, is in Third World immigration. In every way and every day this lowering of standards certainly shows.

Money Is Still Being Thrown at Art Despoilers

Much like the hydra monster of Hercules's day, the National Endowment for the Arts is proving almost impossible to kill. After much posturing about eliminating the program, pusillanimous Republicans gave the NEA $128 million in the much-ballyhooed budget.

G.O.P. leaders rather shamefacedly claimed they at least wounded the beast. Only a few years ago allotments were running as high as $176 million. For the tens of millions of Americans who look upon the NEA as a ridiculous boondoggle, it was a painful blow when Congress continued to lavish money on the agency.

First, foremost and above all, art, as defined by the hustlers known as art dealers and their Philistine followers, does not touch the overwhelming majority of the American people. To force our abused taxpayers to add these completely unjustified millions to their behemoth tax bill is injustice at its purest.

There are many smelly aspects to NEA money. Nineteen percent off the top goes to administration. Last year 63% of NEA grants were not properly accounted for. The NEA has never been subjected to an independent review by an agency outside of government.

To further complicate this mess, the NEA spreads its loot in a most uneven manner. A third of its direct grants go to only six cities: New York, Boston, San Francisco, Chicago, Los Angeles and Washington. A third of the country's congressional districts never get any NEA funding. A fifth of the grants go to arts organizations that already have multimillion-dollar budgets.

Serrano's "masterpiece"

Serrano's Piss Christ and Mapplethorpe's porno-homo photos are but two egregious examples of the trash the public's dollars are subsidizing.

One proposal that makes some sense is to change the way the largesse is ladled out. The supercilious argument of Jane Alexander, the NEA's Jewish chairwoman, is that art is like the apple industry. "Most apples come from a few states with ripe growing conditions and are shipped around the country for everybody to enjoy." The implication is that areas she and her cohorts select should receive the lion's share of the free money.

If—heaven forbid—our soft-headed congressmen continue to throw away money on the NEA, then they should put a rider on the bill that the money should be converted into block grants to the states.

Once again the lesson to be learned is that government bureaucracies soon after their creation all share the same objective—to take all action necessary to protect the jobs of agency bosses and their bureaucratic underlings.

Wrong Target (I)

In regard to the article, "Go After Muds Not Jews" (August 1997), yes, muds are a threat to our country and a catalyst in its dismantlement. Yes, they will continue to grow in power so long as they are treated adoringly by the media. But those who control the media dictate what subjects will be highlighted or ignored and, most important, what our attitude will be towards those topics. The muds don't control the media, the long schnozzles do!

Wrong Target (II)

It won't be long before Hispanics outnumber blacks. Anyone who has had contact with both groups realizes that Hispanics are more compatible with the kind of country we once had. But with 90 million of them breeding like rabbits south of the border, they have the potential of transforming the U.S. into another Brazil.

Asians probably will never outnumber blacks or Hispanics in the New World, although they could if they set their minds to it. But Asians have links to powerful countries that will soon be capable of doing great damage to the U.S. That is not true of any black or Hispanic country.

Blacks are a threat to the U.S., not because of any inherent power they possess, but because of what we permit them to do. Of all these threatening minorities, they would be the easiest to control. All in all, it's hard for me to see how "our main problem stems from blacks."

ZIPLESS

Wrong Target (III)

XAMAX writes (Aug. 1997): "Our main problem stems from blacks, not Jews." This puts me in mind of a doctor telling an AIDS patient: "If we can only cure your pneumonia, your AIDS condition will take care of itself."

Anti-Christer

How dare Zip 782 "implore" Instauration to ban anti-Christian articles? How dare she call Christianity the "religion of Europe?" It is an importation from the Middle East. This concatenation of three incompatible parts, Zoroastrianism, Judaism and Buddhism, with its Arab "god" or "Son of God," has been inflicted on the less resistant minds of Europeans and their descendants for nearly 2,000 years. Now Zip 782 wishes to prevent communication among those with the most cultural antibodies to fight alien incursions. Christians have had such numerical superiority and Jews such horrific influence that very few of us have had the experience of enjoying life in a society which reflects European mental stability and love of nature and racial kinsmen.

Hot-Button Topics

September's edition of my favorite magazine hit the mark. Judson Hammond's depiction of the white response to alien-imposed racial integration in post-Civil War New Orleans gave us a taste of how our forefathers reacted to the destruction of their own culture by carpetbaggers who wanted nothing but our gold and our lives. V.S. Stinger's acerbic wit delivered a Stuka-bomber assault on the unwise and the unwary in our own ranks who foolishly dared to mix race and religion. And a new contributor to Instauration gave us powerful insights into the problems and opportunities surrounding that eternal issue of women and race. Once I thought that religion alone had the power of upsetting our racial applecart. Now I believe sex is a thousand-fold more devastating. Is the behavior of the white man towards the white woman really responsible for driving her into the arms of the black man? Does the white woman really resent being sanctioned by respectable society from having her fling with a black buck? What does the white woman expect from such a liaison? These and a thousand other questions seem to surround the topic of sex and race. In the debate Instauration seems to be the only publication worth listening to.

Walt and Leni

In "Disney Calumniated" (Sept. 97), Zip 782 leaves out an important reason why Hollywood Jewry couldn't stand Walt the Gentile. The incident in question is recounted by Leni Riefenstahl in her autobiography, Memoiren (St. Martins, 1992), where she recalls her 1938 visit to America (pp. 239-40). She describes being followed in Hollywood by private detectives, as local newspapers ran advertisements that proclaimed, "There is no place in Hollywood for Leni Riefenstahl." At the Disney studios, however, she was welcomed. The boss took her around for a whole day. He even showed her sketches for his new movie Fantasia. Then Disney mentioned that he would like to see both parts of her documentary, Olympia. Since Riefenstahl had a full print back in her hotel room, there didn't seem to be any problem. But there was a problem. Walt couldn't see the film because "then all Hollywood would find out by tomorrow." Riefenstahl countered by saying they could watch it in his private screening room. That way, she said, "[N]o one will know." Disney knew better:

> My projectionists are unionized. . .people will find out from them. I am an independent producer, but I don't do my own distributing and I don't have my own theaters. There is a chance I might be boycotted. The risk is too great.

Three months later Disney caved in. The American press reported that Walt didn't know who Riefenstahl was when he met her. Riefenstahl says that he was forced to make the statement or be damned as a Nazi sympathizer.

Back to Our Own Culture, Please!

Re "Back to Christianity" (August 1997), I am one of your heathen subscribers (since Vol. 1, No. 1) who is growing increasingly tired of the Christian recidivism of some Instaurationists. These people seem to think that Christianity created, rather than derailed, Western culture. (Which would we rather have, Pagan Greece and Germania or Byzantium?)

The facts are clear. Without Christianity, Western culture would still be alive today and greatly advanced instead of expiring in a mishmash of Semitic polyglotism.

Just as Gibbon observed of Rome, the accelerating destruction of our culture is directly linked to our Christianization. Odin alone, patron of wisdom and knowledge (however dangerous), can save us. Our ancestors only turned away from our native Gods and Goddesses because of Christian persecution. We should not forget the crusade of the Christianized Franks against the heathen Saxons, which resulted in the murder of up to two thirds of the Saxon population. Christian imperialism totally destroyed the pagan concept of individual liberty of conscience.

The Christianity that we see on the rise in the pages of Instauration could give us nothing better than Abrahamic submission on a global scale. The New World Order is little more than a magnification of the Christian mindset of domination and submission that prevailed from the fall of the Graeco-Roman ideal through to the Renaissance, which was a partial recovery of European heathen attitudes.

One cannot both defend individual liberty and hold a Christian worldview. The two are incompatible and irreconcilable. The Christian will always end up worshipping the Messianic State and the One over the Many. Consequently the pro-Christian slant of too many contributors to Instauration reflects the cause of our decline and can never contribute to our revival.

A Christian Instaurationist is like an AIDS-ridden gay who purports to favor white survival. AIDSters can always change their "glory holes," but never their cancer-spots.

Stop Squabbling About Nomenclature

It is insanity on our part to be debating what to call ourselves in the 11th hour of our existence. I have been listening to this nit-picking, hair-splitting, haggling nonsense for far too long. (If I were ever guilty of haggling, I would resign as a white man and knit myself a beanie.) It is the pinheaded intellectuals among us who are responsible for this endless agonizing over whether we are Aryans, the Majority, Teutons, Nordic, Kelts or, silliest of all, Nordish.

We are all of these things and none of them. We are the white race, period. To attempt to coin and put into general use a term like Nordish which probably no more than 10,000 people have ever heard of is ridiculous. Part Dinaric, Mediterranean, Teuton, Nordic or whatever. We've got to stop such talk. We know who is white and who isn't. We know there's been some interracial hanky-panky on the fringes. We'll take care of that when we come to power.

If some Turk wants to think he's white, let him. We know better. White is a noble and honorable term which suits our purpose just fine. From this day forward let there be no further debate on what to call ourselves. We have more important tasks. At this stage of our existence anyone still engaged in a debate about names is an egocentric fool or worse.

Negro-Hispanic Split

I do not doubt the veracity of Zip 787's speculation, "I daresay when the Hispanics take over Texas the blacks will no longer get a free ride." Blacks have played the "guilty for slavery" theme with Majority Americans for years and are still playing it. I am amazed that Minnesotans, most of whom had arrived from Scandinavia after 1880 and had nothing to do with slavery, swallowed this bilge. I suspect that Hispanics won't have any patience with such rhetoric. There are very few black "leaders" with the courage to tell their people that their problems are not due to white racism and can only be solved by large applications of soap and water, hard work, sexual abstinence, sobriety and obedience to the law. Oddly the only one who comes close to preaching these solutions is Louis Farrakhan.

The South Was Right!

The April Instauration had an excellent piece, "Honest Abe's True Colors," by Grey Fox. Shortly after I read that eye-opener, Turner Movie Classics showed D.W. Griffith's great silent movie, Birth of a Nation. At about the same time, I learned of the controversial book, The South Was Right. I thought it might be too hot to be distributed through normal channels. Surprise, surprise, my local book dealer was able to order it for me. The authors are the brothers Kennedy, James Ronald and Walter Donald, from Louisiana. The back of the dust jacket states,

> The authors maintain. . . that the South had a legal precedent to secede. . . .And even today. . .has as much right to reclaim its liberty as the people of Poland, the Baltic States, Palestine, the former Soviet Union and Yugoslavia have done.

The authors believe that the Civil War is misnamed, as do some Instaurationists. They call it The War for Southern Independence. Right on. The term Civil War implies separate factions vying for control. The 1861-1865 conflict was a brutal, ruthless invasion of an outnumbered, out-gunned, agrarian people. The South simply desired to be left alone.

On page 276 of The South Was Right, there is an interesting parallel drawn, comparing the government of the U.S. with England's after the English conquest of the Scottish people.

> The South, like Scotland, fell victim to the forces of invasion, conquest, and oppression. The forces of Yankee imperialism—Lincoln, his party, the war governors. . .were determined to use their military might to enforce a final solution to the Southern problem. The campaign was initiated during The War for Southern Independence and continues to this day.

The book contains a prophetic quote from Confederate President Jefferson Davis: "The principle for which we contended is bound to reassert itself, although it be at another time and in another form."

Forrest Stumbled?

What got into the usually reliable N.B. Forrest in his article, "Bogus Civility" (July 1997)? Hostile control of the presidency, mass media, bureaucracy, most of the judiciary and a functional majority in Congress is as strong as ever. If our government is serving our interests more than previously, I surely haven't noticed it!

Holy Ghost!

The only really powerful and numerous organizations fighting our enemies—and feared and attacked by them—are our churches. So save the attacks on religion for later!

View from Minority City

For minorities to criticize whites about our presumed hyper-racial awareness is the pot calling the kettle black. For minorities, both immigrant and native, live in a fog of race-fixation.

Black students at the University of Maryland's School of Engineering recently made such a fuss about their low math scores that professors were forced to insist that all test papers be turned in only with the student's Social Security number—not his or her name—to prevent any notion of race bias creeping into the grading process. The switch, of course, made no difference in test results.

Minorities, needless to say, care not a whit about the impact they make on the Majority's world, such as forcing white women to carry sidearms when they stray from the hearth after dark in cities like New York and Los Angeles. It was not always so in the days before minorityism got its death grip on Majority culture.

Though first-generation immigrants usually show up for work, the jobs they take throw native-born minorities into the ranks of the workless. Second-generation arrivals often wind up adopting black ghetto culture, joining gangs and participating in petty criminality and street violence. "Minority downward mobility" is how one writer has described this process.

Advocates of large-scale infusions of minorities fall back on America's historical involvement with immigration as the departure point for their arguments. They don't like to point out that the 32 million immigrants who came here between 1880 and 1920 were overwhelmingly European. In the Pennsylvania coal town of my youth, such folks not only worked hard, but educated and acculturized their children to love America. Their world of church, home and community remains mute testimony to the difference between past and present immigrant cultures. The new wave seems largely unassimilable, destabilizing and politically volatile. The nation is buying lots of trouble for itself, as well as for its progeny, in allowing large-scale minority immigration to continue.

More and more, the nation's racial problems originate with a four-day trek through the broiling Texas sun. At the end of a dusty country road lies a large vegetable farm which never seems to attract the attention of INS agents. There the illegals will work until their compadres clue them into the technique of translating bogus identity cards into claims for public assistance, Medicaid, Food Stamps, Aid to Dependent Children and even Social Security for their elderly kinfolk whose addresses may run all the way from Bangor to Bakersfield.

Some years back I found myself in a classical summer retreat from urban minorityism in the woodlands of Maine just north of Bar Harbor, where a roadside lobster restaurant offered not only cheap and delicious seafood, but a gorgeous back-porch view of the Atlantic coastline. There, lo and behold, I found a dozen of the meanest, ugliest Mexicano farm workers lounging about in preparation for their continued excursion to points elsewhere. I wondered where this Mexican invasion stops? In Labrador?

It is a fact that Latino immigrants believe with the conviction of religion that they shall inherit all of North America from the hated Anglos. Latinos, a determined, prideful and headstrong people filled with a combustible mixture of rhetoric and cheap wine, see themselves as the conquistadores of the 21st century and their black brothers as soul-damaged victims of white slavery. The Latino spirit of racial mythology remains central to this people, its politics and its destiny. The reaction of blacks to their rejection by Latinos has been to build bridges of political alliance to the white liberal world, the connection based on a presumed shared spirit of real Americanism. What all this maneuvering adds up to is one more dose of both large and small "d" democratic claptrap.

ARS POETICA

"To resuscitate the dead art. . ."
he said, and damn near buried it.
But failure's normal in this game—
"a mug's game," as another said—
every age a Sisyphus pushing the great round wonder up a slippery hill. So here we are at the bottom again, oppressed as always by the gorgeous past and a mean present—Poetry
the wrong turning they had her try.

Her self-appointed saviours—
the Pound/Olson/Williams axis and Ransome's clinical New Crit—what have they left alive for us, what fruit of the "open field" bit?
A desert of dull twitterings—
a darkling plain where I have heard the monads singing each to each, where academic egos clash
by night, and public funds appear in works that scorn the public ear.
O generation all convinced that ancient discipline—the music of true verse revolving upon itself—may now be done away with, rendered obsolete for those to whom "verse" is but scattered prose, and anyone who jots it down entitled to the laurel crown!

And what of Poetry in their wake?
Encircled by the lit-mags' gloom,
I think of Wordsworth and of Blake, of Marvell in the muttering tomb. . .

Cultural Catacombs

White Sox Are Turning Black

While in Chicago last summer I paid a visit to Comiskey Park on the South Side. Having seen the White Sox on TV, I knew the team was not overstocked with white players. The pictures in the program indicated only about one-third of the team was white—a proportion more in keeping with football or basketball. Further examination of the program revealed two Jews (Reinsdorf and Einhorn) ran the team with a Board of Directors composed overwhelmingly of the Chosen. Charles Comiskey, the "Old Roman," would not have approved. Notoriously tight with a buck, he would have been horrified by Reinsdorf's paying $11 million a year to Albert Belle, the most obnoxious Negro in major league baseball.

Drug-Pushing Rabbis

A warrant is out for the arrest of Jack Pinski, an Orthodox Jew who laundered money for Colombian drug rings. Born into an affluent Jewish family in Colombia, he moved to Zoo City's Upper West Side ten years ago. Other "respectable" Chosenites allegedly involved in drug-money laundering are Mahir Reiss and his brother, Abraham, two New York real estate speculators. Abe sits on the board of an Orthodox girls school. Mahir, a Talmud scholar, has hired a Jewish "Constitutional Attorney" to head his defense team.

Unimportant Promises

It was heartening to see so many Majority faces crowded into the Washington Mall at the massive convocation of Promise Keepers. It was disheartening to hear them talk and see their prayerful contortions. Instead of worrying about the fate of their country, all that seemed to concern them was paying more attention to their wives and children and "reaching out" to people of all races. Instead of praying to God for redemption, etc., they should be praying for their race, the great race, which is being replaced by alien races.

Hopes Dashed

There is nothing that Majority activist organizations need and want more than some attractive blonde members. It was almost too good to be true when Carol Howe, a fetching Tulsa debutante, answered a dial-a-racist telephone line operated by a local radical rightist. She was recruited on the spot. There was soon talk of a romance between her and the group's leader. Alas, as anyone could have foretold, she turned out to be a BATF plant. She should have been unmasked when she started playing the old game of trying to win the confidence of her associates by out-Nazi-ing Hitler. At one time she boasted she would blow up 15 U.S. cities. A federal trial finally set matters straight, cleared her of any fascist taint and allowed her to return to the bosom of one of Tulsa's first families.

Antiwhite Chairman

How much reconciling is Clinton's advisory board on race going to do? Not much, if the appointment of 82-year-old John Hope Franklin as chairman is an indication of what to expect. Franklin, a black Harvard historian, once wrote of the Founding Fathers, "Those hypocrites at Philadelphia freeing themselves from Britain with their foot [sic] on other peoples' necks."

Clinton Urges White Culturcide

The President told a group of black journalists in June that America can live "without" having a dominant European culture. "We want to become a multiracial, multiethnic society." So there we have it. Clinton baldly admits he wants to junk the country's culture and replace it with a farrago of other peoples' cultures —a mess that can only lead to ever more ethnic and racial clashes. To put it more dramatically, America's march downhill is being led by the President himself. The worst part of it all is he really doesn't know what he is doing. All he knows is what he must do to get media support. If this means destroying his own country, so be it.

Slight Easing of Censorship

When the German scandal sheet, Stern, discovered that Heinrich Harrer, the central figure in a new Hollywood film, Seven Years in Tibet, was a real-life member of the SS in his salad days, studio bosses demanded a few quick changes. Brad Pitt, playing Harrer, was ordered to say in a voice-over that he was a "distinguished" Nazi. After watching the arrival of Chinese generals in Tibet, in a second voice-over, he confessed, "I shudder to recall that once, long ago, I embraced the same ideas that were held by these intolerant people." With that the Jewish censors seemed mollified, particularly as several other swipes at Nazis and Nazism were embedded in the original screen play.

The long shadow of Nazism also fell on The English Patient a few years ago when the leading male character turned out to have had some Nazi connections. But since he was portrayed as a villain as well as a tenuous hero, the film went on to win several prizes. Nazis have been a mainstay of Western filmdom in the last half-century, but only recently have they been portrayed as having one or two human traits.

Who Gets the Dough

Bill Gates, once again #1 on the Forbes roster with almost $40 billion, spends much of his time overseeing the construction of his $40-million waterside palace near Seattle and palling around with his new Hollywood friends—Spielberg, Katzenberg and Geffen of DreamWorks SKG, whose long-awaited first production, the yawn-inducing Peacemaker, was hyped to the skies. Gates's onetime Microsoft sidekick, Paul Allen, has funneled $500 million into DreamWorks. It will be interesting to see how much money, if any, the Jewish showbizzers will allow the goy investors to retrieve.

Hate Crime that Wasn't

Steven Hall, a black pfc. at Ft. Benning (GA), had a smart idea. He had another black G.I. daub the walls of his room with racial slurs, then carry off his television and stereo. The idea was to make the military police think it was a "hate crime," in addition to being a robbery. Instead of getting back $2,400 from an insurance company, as he had planned, Hall and his buddy were caught and themselves found guilty of a hate crime. Hall got 16 months in the stockade and a bad conduct discharge. A week later his partner in crime was court-martialed.

Crazies in the Work Force

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has issued a lot of rulings, but none as outrageous as its expansion of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 to "accommodate" the mentally ill. Henceforth employers may not only have to provide for mental defectives, but must furnish personnel, sometimes medical personnel, to help them complete their assigned tasks. Wheelchair-riding black Barbie dolls are now a #1 bestseller. Is the public being readied for a new Barbie doll strapped to her bed?

Inklings

Questionable Brutality

Justin Volpe, one of the four New York policemen arrested for the rough handling of a Haitian immigrant (legal or illegal?), has a black girlfriend. He asked with some justification how he could possibly be a racist? He and his beloved, he explained, had been living together for two years and planned to marry and have children. Like Volpe, the other cops denied any part in sodomizing Abner Louima (with a handle of a toilet plunger). The cops' main defense was that the black had received his considerable injuries in a homosexual brawl in the nightclub where he was arrested. In the meantime Louima, who is suing New York City for $55 million, is out of the hospital, the four cops are out on bail and Zoo City blacks are having an antiwhite field day.

Kinky Marv

There was one unusual angle to the Marv Albert story. In sex cases of this type the male is often a Jew and the female a white bimbo. This time both the accused and the accuser were Chosen. From the looks of the 42-year-old Vanessa Perhach, Albert's "friend," it's difficult to understand why the millionaire sports announcer had so many rendezvous with her over a period of 10 years. One educated guess is that she was the only person willing to provide him with female lingerie and round up well-endowed males for Marv's threesomes. Why, after enduring Albert for so long, Vanessa suddenly got "offended," is also somewhat of a mystery. Maybe Marv's teeth really hurt. Despite all the legal song and dance, Albert, convicted of a misdemeanor, will probably spend not one hour in jail.

Safe House for Jewry

What does it take for the media to criticize Israel? First two Jews, Samuel Sheinbein and Aaron Needle, have to butcher and dismember an Hispanic, Alfredo Tello Jr. Needle was jailed without bail, but Sheinbein fled to Israel, presumably with the help of his father and brother. So far the Israelis have refused to allow him to be extradited to the U.S., once again reinforcing the idea that Israel is a safe house for Jewish criminals.

All this was too much for Hispanics, who held a noisy demonstration in front of the Israeli Embassy in Washington (DC). It was also too much for Rep. Robert Livingston (R-LA), chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, who warned that if Israel continues to protect Sheinbein he, Livingston, would recommend looking closely at America's $3-billion-a-year tribute to the Zionist state.

Nothing, of course, will happen because American Jews can easily stop any such move. But it does represent one more example of how ever-increasing Jewish arrogance may one day make it possible to loosen the Israeli death-grip on American public opinion.

Paula's a Fighter

Paula Jones's original two lawyers backed out when their client refused to agree to the $700,000 settlement that would have given them a sizable bite of the legal booty.

Paula turns down big bucks

Instead of settling with Clinton, Paula, thanks to the financial help of a foundation, has hired a team of six new attorneys to pursue her case. She swears she wants to fight, not settle. From the looks of it she's going to get her way. Meanwhile somebody, possibly Clinton himself, has sicced the IRS on Paula. She has been ordered to supply details on her 1994, 1995 and 1996 tax returns. Not often do tax collectors audit a woman who lives in a small rented apartment with two children and a husband who makes $37,000 a year.

Horrible Way to Go

Melisa Mills, 33, mother of four and four months pregnant, was rudely awakened at 5:45 a.m. on August 19 by a black intruder who had crawled through an open window of the Mills' home in Montgomery (AL). The Negro held Melisa hostage while he ordered her husband, Andy, to go to the nearest bank machine teller and withdraw every bit of cash he could. When Andy returned with $375, the black said it wasn't enough and sent him out to cash some checks. When he returned this time with more money, the black was still not satisfied and sent him back again. By the time Andy finally returned home, this time with the police, his wife had been raped and was dead from stab wounds. Renaldo Adams, a 17-year-old "youth," was arrested and charged with the crime. All things considered it wasn't exactly a nice way for a decent Southern mother to have her life ended. It is doubtful if the fate of Mrs. Mills will be discussed in the next meeting of Clinton's advisory board on race.

Tennis Champ Ignored

Tennis now has a female Tiger Woods. She is Venus Williams, 17, a string-beanish black who came in second in the women's division of the U.S. Open. So much Tiger Woods-ish hype was bestowed on her that tennis fans all but ignored the winner, Martina Hingis, 16, of Switzerland. In idolizing Venus, the media managed to make hay out of one of those almost obligatory racial incidents. When Williams and Irina Spirlea of Romania bumped into each other at the net in the semi-finals, Williams' father yowled it was a deliberate act of racism on the part of Spirlea, whom he slurred as a "big, ugly, tall, white turkey."

Ill-Timed Praise

Dr. Patrick Chavis, whose displacement of a more qualified white applicant for medical school led to the the Supreme Court's famous Bakke case, was recently touted by Ted Kennedy as a sort of Negro Mother Teresa "serving a disadvantaged community and making a difference in the lives of scores of poor families." (Kennedy, incidentally, couldn't even get Chavis's name right. He called him Bernard Chavis.) Only a few days after Fat Face's gooey encomium, Chavis lost his license for causing the death of a patient undergoing liposuction. Chalk up another needless fatality to affirmative action.

The Times Strikes Out

Since it has failed to produce any meaningful and convincing arguments for quotas, the N.Y. Times made an all-out ad hominem attack on Ward Connerly, a chief booster of California's Prop 209. After sneering at Connerly for being Irish, French and Choctaw, as well as black, the Times story blamed his opposition to affirmative action on a "self-hating grandmother." Connerly's other sin, groaned the Times, was embellishing tales of his sufferings in his poverty-stricken youth.

Bill Richardson, the Clinton-appointed ambassador to the U.N., is only half Hispanic. In 1995 he sounded like a full-blooded member of La Raza to a gathering of 400 radical Latino activists at the University of California at Riverside:

If racism is partly responsible for the Sudden Infant Death Syndrome in the U.S., what or who is responsible for the death rate of babies in Zaire (93/100,000)?

Stanley Milgram was nominated in 1974 for a National Book Award for his magnum opus, Obedience to Authority. As Casey Stengel would say, you could look it up. Look what up? Look up what has become famous (or infamous) as the "Milgram experiment."

To begin at the beginning, first check out the story of Abraham in the Bible; check out the magic-mesmerized mob that schlepped behind Moses for 40 years in a desert which could have been traversed in weeks; check out that long line of martyrs who were fed to the lions in the Colosseum and herded into the legendary shower baths in Bergen-Belsen and Sobibor; check out all those equinoxed, robotic light-headed heroes of the Light Brigade who charged into certain death in the Crimea; check out all those hell-bent-for-leather Leathernecks who slogged to certain death through tides up to their necks at Tarawa and made themselves willing whim-wham targets for Bushidoed Japs who ambushed our boys at Iwo Jima; check out all those gimcracked, jihaded Japanese who banzaied themselves right into a double-barreled atom bombing at Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

You don't need saki to do a Nagasaki, according to Stanley Milgram. So what does it take to sashsay into Zyklon B shower baths in silence? Little more than a white lab coat, says Milgram, who achieved his apotheosis in the heart of darkest Yale.

So if rats and dog were good enough for Russia's Pavlov, nothing less than real people had to be good enough for all-American Milgram, whose research project was simple—to study the relationship between learning and pain. So what else is new? The carrot or the stick? Hasn't that been known from time immemorial? Hasn't the carrot simply replaced that snake-bitten apple of Eden. Hasn't Adam's rib become the stick?

Milgram, a Jewish psychologist, equipped his research laboratory with a simulated electric chair. Then he enlisted the services of a "teacher," a volunteer "learner" and an "experimenter" garbed in a white lab coat, the uniform of medical-research authority.

The victim learner was strapped into the hot seat and an electrode attached to his wrist. The teacher was seated before a "control panel" equipped with an impressive array of switches and knobs "controlling" a scale calibrated from 15 to 450 volts.

The teacher baptized himself with a 45-volt jolt of electricity to show that the experiment was real, to provide a relatively mild antipasto of what the victim learner would be pasted with in the course of the experiment. After all, the teacher's sincerity could not be ascertained unless he was given a taste of what was to be served at the banquet.

The learner was read a list of word pairs—dog/cat, black/white, rich/poor, up/down. Every time the teacher read a word to the learner, the latter was required to answer with the correct matching words from the list of pairs. Each time the learner failed, he received a shock.

Milgram was applying the pleasure-pain principle to the process of learning. If rats can be taught to run a maze correctly by a series of punishments and rewards, shocks and food pellets of tough love, why not people?

The dirty little secret of the experiment was that the whole set-up was a charade. After all, what idiot would volunteer to be shocked as an incentive to parroting word pairs?

The victim learner was an actor who only pretended to be electrically jolted.

Sixty percent of the Yale undergraduates who participated as teachers administered the full 450 volts to the learner, despite all his screaming, begging and pleading for mercy. Only on rare occasions did the teacher have to be reminded of his duty to continue the experiment and increase the learner's agony. Usually all it took was a word or two of encouragement from the experimenter in his white lab coat to override the misgivings of the teacher who controlled the voltage regulator. Many teachers needed no prompting at all and were quite anxious to do whatever was required.

Even these pampered undergraduates, even these affluent representatives of Yale's best and the brightest, even these superlative examples of our Hamiltonian plutocracy, even they persisted in testing and challenging the learner's ability to endure pain. The ersatz screams notwithstanding, the teachers themselves continued to do their sadistic duty.

After all, if you can't remember to match what everyone knows—"democracy" with "money," "Hollywood" with "liberal" and liberal with "affirmative action"—don't you deserve to get shocked back into reality?

Why should it be shocking to discover that some Milgramite teacher even insisted on delivering electric shocks after the learner was feigning unconsciousness? Who hasn't longed to kick an enemy when he's down?

Like the biblical recruiters of early Christianity, Milgram scoured the highways and byways for highwaymen and wheelrights and wrongsters, and subjected them to his experiment. The results from hoi polloi who hadn't been polluted by the valueless values of Yale were essentially the same.

Why did the teachers continue to administer shocks of electricity (even to the point that might be considered lethal), despite the painful gyrations of the learners? Some continued because the experimenter who urged them on took personal responsibility for their actions. Some felt duty bound to complete the experiment. Many were proud of obeying the lab-coated boss, despite. the "difficult circumstances" of administering great pain.

How could all those ordinary Germans, Goldhagen's willing executioners, do all that killing? How could all those extraordinary Jews—chosen to spread the word of God—do all that killing in Palestine?

Milgram summed up the result of his theatrical experiment in these words:

> This is, perhaps, the most fundamental lesson of our study: ordinary people, simply doing their jobs, and without any particular hostility on their part, can become agents in a terrible destructive process. Moreover, even when the destructive effects of their work become patently clear, and they are asked to carry out actions incompatible with fundamental standards of morality, relatively few people have the resources needed to resist authority.

Especially when authority is whitewashed in a lab coat (or a military uniform) and is driven by a relentless ideology of survival and revenge—like Zionism, say?

Dixie Rising, a half-hour show on WNAH-AM, Nashville, is hosted by Dan Bennett, who wants to revive the Confederacy as one large, independent (and dare we say?) ethnostate. Arizona and Utah would be allowed to join the Southern states if they so chose. Bennett's Confederacy, he assures us, would be based on honest, hands-off government and embossed with conservative-style morality. No slavery, no racism on the one hand; no affirmative action on the other. In general Bennett advocates a postbellum South that has little in common with the antebellum one. Bennett, by the way, happens to be married to a Korean. Somehow this latest apostle of Southern secession is missing the point.

How's the Southern Baptist Convention's boycott of the Disney Co. going? A USA Weekend poll found that 49.5% of the population favor it.

Ron Fortner is a right-wing talking head who has been holding forth on KNWZ-AM, Palm Desert (CA), since May 1993. No more. He has been forced to decamp by a minority-inspired boycott of his advertisers. On his last show he got pretty stirred up:

> There's a very dangerous precedent being set. What it means essentially is that a free press remains free only to the highest bidder. . . .It means radio and television stations and newspapers are becoming nothing but brothels.

The pretense for Fortner's dismissal was a broadcast in which he said illegal immigrants are illiterate in both English and Spanish and cannot read signs requiring restaurant workers to wash their hands.

Rick Kaplan, known as Clinton's toadiest TV booster, is now president of CNN, which was founded by Mr. Jane Fonda. Ted Turner, a manic depressive, is heavy on the manic and is a lithium pill-popper. His latest "grand gesture" is the promise to give $1 billion (over the next ten years) to the UN. Anything to keep him in the big, black headlines he savors. Kaplan, one of the many Jews who has slept in Lincoln's bed, is expected to shove slightly conservative CNN to the liberal side of the TV spectrum.

How many Majority women have been polluted by creepo Larry King? At least seven official wives, plus innumerable one- or two-night stands. In 1987 Larry had a heart attack. Just after marrying his latest, Shawn Southwick, in early September, he had an angioplasty. Jews might wonder when Larry will get around to marrying a Jewess. Perhaps when he gets rid of Southwick or, more accurately, when Southwick gets rid of him, and he goes for #8.

Ted Koppel began two recent Nightline programs devoted to black crime in America by solemnly complaining that half the black men in the District of Columbia are either fugitives, imprisoned or on parole. The "solution" to this horrendous situation most often advanced by Koppel's all-black panel of guests, is jury nullification. In jury trials blacks should acquit black defendants, no matter what the evidence. One Negro worried that white juries might also practice this when and where white defendants are involved.

More and more of the Majority's best genes are dribbling away into alien nests. The Director General of BBC is John Birt, a lapsed Catholic, whose son Jonathan has converted to Islam and married an Asian Indian Muslim named Fozia Bora. Jonathan's mother is an American artist. Jonathan's father is by force of circumstance (Jewish pressure) pro-Israel. Jonathan and his wife are pro-Palestinian.

Russia's War on PBS was praised by some discerning TV critics (there are not many) for finally, some 50 years after the fact, letting boob-tubers see Soviet atrocities in WWII. All well and good, except there seemed to be an over-generous helping of Nazi atrocities mixed in with the Soviet ones. So in one sense the show was just another Holocaust rerun.

Disney-owned ABC-TV is taking a hit from Catholics in San Antonio, who are picketing KSAT-TV for running Nothing Sacred, a show which, in the eyes of some of the faithful, is a blunderbuss attack on Christianity. One picketer claimed that Disney, quite happy to put on an anti-Catholic show, "wouldn't do this to the Jews because the Jews know how to fight back."

Two Canadian radio stations now carry the ethnically repellent Howard Stern. The Toronto and Montreal press pretended to be outraged. Back in civilized times, the contents of Stern's mind would have been viewed as mental swill and the highest he could hope to rise would be MC of a second-rate burlesque show. Now he makes a million bucks or so a year and is a big, big celebrity. He feeds on race, but somehow is forgiven for his scabrous remarks because he himself is 50% Jewish and because his minorityite sidekick is a Negress, whose job is to deflect and soft-pedal Stern's drivel. Dragging the Jewish party line along with him on his first program, he insulted Francophones in Quebec by ordering them to learn and speak English and by insinuating that most Frenchmen collaborated with the Nazis in WWII. He also made it appear that the 7.8 million French Canadians had only arrived in Canada a few years ago.

Howard Rosenberg, the L.A. Times TV critic, was absolutely thrilled by the rousing pro-queer panegyric Ellen DeGeneres delivered during the Emmy Awards. These are the words he praised so gushingly:

> I accept this on behalf of the people—and the teenagers especially—out there who think there is something wrong with them because they're gay. And there's nothing wrong with you, and don't let anyone make you ashamed of who you are.

The global Emmy audience was estimated at 620 million. CBS didn't charge the homosexual community for Ellen's commercial.

In regard to her skewed sexuality, Ellen has let it be known that she is still "uncomfortable" about kissing another woman on camera. She feels better about smooching with a man. Nevertheless she may be doing some lesbian kissing on the Ellen show this fall. The writers have given her a girlfriend.

From Zip 420. Channel surfing, I came upon a Showtime movie set in the Old West. An attractive young blonde had been waylaid by a gang of white cowboys. Defending her was a young Negro dressed and fighting like Indian movie hero Billy Jack. In fact one of the bad guys referred to the Negro as "the Indian." The latter was beating his foes like a redheaded stepchild. Then he was stunned and fell down. One of the white men must've hit him from behind. The four white gang members, still conscious, grabbed the blonde and prepared to rape her.

All was not lost. Over the ridge rode a pair of Negro cowboys. One was former NFL running back Jim Brown. The blacks in figurative white hats quickly shot the four would-be white rapists dead. One of the dead men was the blonde's late husband. Jim Brown asked the woman where she was headed. She told him. It just so happened that Brown and his sidekick were going that way. "You wanna ride with us?" the black queried. The young woman nodded her blonde tresses in the affirmative.

Ten years ago such a movie would have enraged me. Now it's so absurd as to be laughable.

From J.H. It isn't exactly the quest for the Holy Grail, but my search for the old Walt Disney Davy Crockett videos is slowly becoming a numinous aspect of my leisure time. I have checked every video outlet imaginable and cannot find them, though my video guide assures me they exist. Why are so many minor Disney titles available, but not the Davy Crockett tales that spawned one of the biggest merchandising bonanzas of the 1950s? It's not like Eisner & Co. to forego the opportunity to make a buck. I'm not the only baby boomer who wants to get another look at those fondly remembered shows. One explanation I can come up with is that old Davy killed too many Mexicans and Indians. That Davy "kilt him a b'ar when he was only three" might well raise the hackles of tree huggers. Sorry, Davy, three strikes and you're out of the video store!

From Zip 230. At a video rental store my young son picked out Bumpety Boo, a story about a little boy and his animated car. When we ran it on the VCR, the credits indicated it had been made in Israel. We figured it was for kids and was probably harmless, though we were unhappy to discover that the little boy encountered a neighborhood bully whom he called a "goy!" We played that part over to make sure we hadn't misunderstood. Sure enough, the boy had yelled, "You goy!" Can you imagine a children's video in which a bully is portrayed as a Jew?

Notes from the Sceptred Isle—John Nobull

I'd like to put a word in favour of Mike Tyson. What did the black beauty contestant expect when she agreed to meet him in a hotel room in the middle of the night? Teasing a man with an IQ as low as that is a risky proposition.

It reminds me of the story of the girl who went on safari in East Africa and was raped by a chimpanzee. Six months later she had a nervous breakdown. "Of course I'm upset", she sobbed. "He never wrote; he never phoned!"

As for biting pieces out of his opponent's ears, isn't that exactly what Michael Collins, the hero of Irish independence, did after winning his not infrequent wrestling bouts? Read all about it in Tim Past Coogan's book on Collins. "A bit of ear" was what Collins always claimed as a token of his victories. If Tyson is a cannibal, so was Collins.

It cannot be denied that Mike Tyson has made the most of his single talent. He has now been beaten, but all boxers are beaten sooner or later, unless they retire in time. In due course he will no doubt do his share of showbiz, like brain-damaged Mohammed Ali inaugurating the Olympics in Atlanta, as his limbs twitched. I heard a couple of British liberals say how touching they found that little episode.

An article by George Fowler in the Barnes Review, "The truth about the Schmeling-Louis fight," suggests very strongly that the bandages under Louis's gloves were hardened with plaster of Paris when he met Schmeling for the second time in 1938. This was apparently common knowledge in the profession. Schmeling's German trainer, Max Machon, was so intimidated by the rabid atmosphere in the Yankee Stadium that he failed to check Joe Louis's gloves. Louis's "autobiography" relates the immense pressure put on him beforehand by trainer Mike Jacobs to win the fight.

Accepted wisdom teaches that Negroes have dominated boxing ever since the heavy glove was introduced, which gave the edge to the man with the thicker cranial case, though there were plenty of white world heavyweight champions long after this type of glove was introduced. Not all of the fights were bona fide. The Barnes Review article claims that Jack Dempsey's hand bandages were also "fixed" with plaster of Paris when he floored giant Jess Willard in 1919.

Like pro-wrestling, big-time boxing is an aspect of show business. Fixing fights is most lucrative for those in on the fix.

In modern times, the nation has become identified with the state, which has become the enemy of the people. In two-party democracies Tweedledum alternates with Tweedledee and the whole trend of change is anti-people.

We hear a lot about the Trilateral Commission, but what is trilateral about it? Germany does not even have a peace treaty, and could legally be reoccupied at any time by the victors of WWII. Japan is forced to invest its profits in the U.S., failing which it will be shut out of the American market. The Trilateral Commission is really nothing but David Rockefeller and his pals, who double with the Bilderbergers, the Council on Foreign Relations and William Jefferson Clinton's largely Chosen administration, which pays huge tribute to Israel yearly, not just the standard $3 billion, but supplementary billions in military and satellite equipment, and settlement grants for Russian Jews. As for the other "nations," they just have to toe the line. All the other democracies, including neutral ones like Switzerland, Ireland and Austria, are careful not to oppose NATO or the Washington-Tel Aviv axis too openly.

I am not denying that nationalism may well be a way to promote racialism (which is all that really matters). Le Pen has shown the way. He knows how the state feels about the people. Why else would he have proposed that the income tax be done away with? The state, with its loathsome bureaucracy, can be whittled down and funded in other ways. I hope the Front National leader realises that the central bank will certainly withhold credit from a Lepéniste administration, so that he would be forced to emulate Hitler in creating a currency backed by the productive power of the country. But whether he will achieve power in the foreseeable future remains to be seen. All the cards are stacked against him. By the time his party takes over, it may find itself heir to a bankrupt state and a stunted economy.

When we think of a nation, we think of the corrupt state which is the manifestation of that nation. Welfare (especially for immigrants) has been doled out by the bureaucracies on the basis of borrowed money. Now the scope for borrowing has being restricted, because too large a part of the GNP is being used up just servicing the national debt. Consequently the whole financial system is in peril.

By all means let us vote for nationalist parties if they are pointed in the right (racialist) direction, but let us do it in the realisation that the state is not the nation. It is the property of corrupt politicians and bureaucrats. The state is building up a multiracial biomass in all Western countries, a biomass incited by the media to regard the middle class as its enemy. To counter this collective libel, we must reach out to the healthy elements of the working class which have refused to become part of the biomass.

Canada. A voice crying in the wilderness will be heard no more—at least on the North Shore News. Doug Collins, now a wise old 77 and still feisty, wrote his last column for the newspaper in September. It's a great loss to free speech or what is left of it in Canada. The minority muzzlers, however, have not completely had their way. Doug will continue to work on his book, Rights and Wrongs, as well as putting together a collection of his most sapient columns. Doug is also sure to be heard from when the British Columbia Human Rights Tribunal finds him guilty or not guilty of "crimes against humanity." Just for writing a few critical comments about the Holocaust, he may be ordered to pay a sizable fine.

Whatever his enemies may say of Doug, he is a "character." Master of a fetchingly persnickety writing style, he has developed the unique habit of refusing to duck the life and death issues that have a direct bearing on the existence not only of his native Canada but of the West as a whole. Very few columnists can say the same of their output.

Martyrs often live longer than their persecutors. A hundred years from now nobody will have heard of the B.C. Human Rights Tribunal, but history books will surely contain a few paragraphs on the work and career of a genuine late 20th-century freedom fighter.

The two assassins who tried to murder Khaled Mashaal, a leading member of Hamas, the Islamic Resistance Movement, were armed with forged Canadian passports. Prime Minister Jean Chrétien was mightily displeased and recalled the Canadian Ambassador to Israel, David Berger, himself probably Jewish. Also displeased was the King of Jordan, where the murder attempt took place. Hussein's kingdom is one of the few countries in the Middle East that has a peace treaty with Israel.

Once again Jewish chutzpah was shown to have no limits. Sending out Mossad hitmen to kill an iconic champion of the Arab cause in a neighboring country is not exactly kosher, not likely to win friends in one of the world's most turbulent areas. Neither did injecting poison into Mashaal's earlobe increase Israel's prestige in the U.S. Even a few congressmen raised their eyebrows. (See Inklings this issue, "Safe House for Jewry.")

From a subscriber. We're not supposed to call the policy apartheid, but Canada maintains separate, comprehensive systems of justice, education, health care, social services and other government programs for the benefit of the aboriginals. Segregationists would rejoice, were it not a matter of whites paying to support the special privileges of nonwhites. Canadian apartheid's most recent "success" came in August with the official opening of the country's first abo-only prison. Located in the notoriously dissolute Samson Cree reservation in central Alberta, it houses up to 60 Indian and Eskimo criminals. Thirty of its 34-member staff are natives. The facility's design, purpose and day-to-day functioning replace punishment for "self-expression" by native spirituality and culture. Aboriginal inmates and the federal government have pronounced it a great step forward. Although the prison houses hardened criminals, it is classified as a minimum security institution.

Britain. Mossad thug Hermann Arndt, the kidnapper of Adolf Eichmann, is not living in Israel, but in the peaceful English town of Devon, where he has been residing for the last 12 years. Kidnappers, once they're caught, usually end up in jail or at the end of a rope. Not Arndt, who is a Jew and whose quarry was a Nazi. In this "sensitive" situation the criminal justice system shuts down Eichmann moved into a house in a Buenos Aires suburb after escaping from de-Nazified Europe. Arndt and his fellow felons snatched him away while he was walking home, drugged him and flew him off to Israel, where he was eventually hanged. The story about Arndt, which appeared in the Daily Mail (July 27, 1997), called Eichmann a "war criminal" and accused him of "carrying out the killing of three-quarters of the Jews in Hungary." The article didn't mention how many people Arndt had killed. "I wouldn't go back to Israel now, it's become uncivilized," Arndt told his interviewer. Is it possible that Arndt's criminal behavior has something to do with the barbarism in Israel he now deplores?

The volcano erupting in Montserrat has less energy that black Bernie Grant, a Labour M.P., who is using the occasion to stir up a lava flow of antiwhite racism. Grant accuses the British government of stumblebumming attempts to move the black population of the once dreamy Caribbean vacation Eden out of harm's way. At last report, despite the volcano acting up worse than ever, half the people still remain on the island.

Bernie's on the warpath

Bernie, an old Trotskyite, once proposed that Britain give £100,000 to any homeboy willing to return to Africa or the Caribbean. It was a proposal that horrified Labourites, but was grudgingly given some support by "send 'em back" rightwingers.

The British supermarket chain, Tesco, was sued by one Dave Feuerstein. On what grounds? Because it offered so many bargain sales that Feuerstein injured his back carrying all his loot home.

Damien Hirst, ethnicity unspecified, is the godfather of a band of clods who call themselves the Britpack and put on "art shows" that feature such works as a cow's head being devoured by flies. Another Britpack production included nude Lolita figures transformed into two-headed and four-headed monstrosities engaging in a display of demented masturbation. Much of this excreta—it's not art but anti-art—is bought and sold by Charles Saatchi, the Jewish advertising mogul.

Scotland. History is going backward. The Scots now have their very own parliament. Call it devolution, call it a push for ethnostates, it tends to revert the government of a state to the people who founded it. Big multinational conglomerates need large armies to defend their ill-gotten gains. When there is peace between neighbors, there is no need for huge armed forces. The Scots are now back in charge of their destiny, except for foreign affairs. Let us hope that even that limitation is soon removed.

France. Ten million Frenchmen have at least one foreign grandparent. Only 100,000 Germans and Italians can make this claim.

With Cardinal Lustiger, the Jewish-born archbishop of Paris, supervising the proceedings, Bishop Olivier de Berranger of Saint-Denis apologized to the Jews of France for the failure of the Church to speak out on their behalf during the German occupation, "We beg God's forgiveness and ask the Jewish people to hear our words of repentance." Among the French survivors of the Holocaust present at the ceremony were some who claimed to have been gassed at Auschwitz but decided to survive so they could bear witness.

So weak and so weighed down with years (77) and a heart triple-bypass, Maurice Papon hardly had the strength to attend his trial accusing him of signing orders a half-century ago that allegedly led to the deportation of 1,650 Jews to German concentration camps. Managing to conceal his brief flirtation with the Vichy regime, in the post-WWII era Papon rose to Police Chief of Paris and Minister of the Budget. Because of his onetime preeminence, defense witnesses will include ex-President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and ex-Prime Minister Raymond Barre.

The Polish-born Jewish cineast, Roman Polanski, fled the U.S. when he was about to serve time for raping a 13-year-old blonde after dosing her with sedatives. Polanski, hunkered down in France for all these years, is now trying to negotiate a plea bargain that would permit him to return to the States, spend no time behind bars and make it possible for him to churn out more of his uninspiring, low-IQ movies.

As the U.S. goes about the job of making every country in the world its enemy, France is fighting back. It intends to ignore the threat of U.S. sanctions and join a consortium with Malaysia and Russia in a $2-billion venture to explore for natural gas in Iran. It's no secret that Israel, dedicated to keeping Iran economically as well as militarily weak, is behind the sanctions, which means that once again the U.S. is putting Israel's interests ahead of its own. One highly placed Frenchmand commented, "This is about American efforts to subject European companies to American legislation." President Yeltsin almost lost his temper when discussing the issue: "Thank God Russia, France and Iran are independent, freedom-loving states."

Most Frenchmen today have six wishes: more money, more cars, earlier retirement, more winter sports, more pay for the jobless, more long weekends.

Germany. From Zip 200. The director of the Jewish Museum in Berlin, Amnon Barzel, has been fired by the Berlin Cultural Authorities for his "intolerable" behavior. Among other missteps Barzel gave an interview to a Berlin magazine in which he stated, "There exists in Berlin a hatred of Jewish history, the Jewish past, Jewish culture and Jewish existence." The chairman of the Jewish community in Berlin, Andreas Nachama, believes Barzel is right and criticized the Berlin Cultural Authorities for firing him. Whether or not Barzel's assessment of Berliners' attitude towards the activities of Jews in the once and future German capital is correct is really immaterial. Barzel is simply not abiding by the unspoken rules of contemporary political etiquette by voicing such sentiments.

Switzerland. He violated Swiss law by stealing bank records scheduled for shredding and handing them over to Jewish groups. Because of his unlawful act, the Swiss authorities began a criminal investigation of Christoph Meili. In doing so, they immediately ran afoul of the Senate's leading Zionoid, Alfonse D'Amato, who brought the paper-shredder and his family to the U.S. and easily persuaded Clinton to sign papers making the Meilis permanent residents. But this was not enough for Senator Panderer. He ordered the Union Bank of Switzerland to drop the criminal investigation. If it didn't, he would see to it that it and other Swiss banks would lose the right to conduct certain types of business in the U.S. As Chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, D'Amato probably has the clout to pull off this shakedown. Having been cowed before by D'Amato, the Swiss meekly complied with his latest ultimatum.

One American Jew can only praise Switzerland for protecting him from U.S. lawmen. Marc Rich flew to Switzerland in 1976 to avoid charges of massive tax evasion. He had already stashed some $500 million abroad, which allowed him to live like a king in the town of Zug. A few months ago Rich bought a Swiss grain trading company with close contacts to Russia and Ukraine—a purchase expected to make him once again a top player in the world commodities market. The only blot on his sunny horizon is a $500 million divorce claim by his wife.

Russia. Jews in Moscow are as powerful in government and finance as American Jews are in Washington. Boris Berezovsky, a member of the National Security Council, has a net worth of $3 billion, which ranks him 97th in the Forbes 100 world's richest list. Vladimir Gusinsky, a banker and mediacrat, is worth $400 million. These and other Jews gave so much money to Yeltsin that he was able to win his reelection campaign, following which he gave his backers handsome rewards.

Another member of Russia's ruling circle is Vladimir Potanin, worth $700 million. He is said to be an ethnic Russian but has a suspiciously unsymmetrical face. He has borrowed large sums of money from George Soros to clinch his various deals.

With this crew in charge, no wonder Russia is becoming what many knowledgeable observers view as a criminal state. According to a just-released report from the Center for Strategic and International Studies, "There is now ample documentary evidence of the criminalization of Russia's economy and politics." Russian crimebusters say there were 785 organized crime groups in Russia in 1990; some 8,000 today.

Modern Russians have been privileged to experience the worst of both communism and capitalism, i.e., state capitalism and international capitalism. "Communism and capitalism are but the two buttocks of the same ass," is a pithy new apothegm making the rounds from Moscow to Vladivostock.

The strenuous endeavors of First Deputy Prime Minister Anatoly Chubais to further reform his "reform" government were dealt a serious setback when his close friend and colleague, Governor Mikhail Manevich of St. Petersburg, was assassinated. Chubais, with a few associates referred to as the St. Petersburg Group, hoped to put the kibosh on the kleptocracy now ruling Russia by establishing a new set of business and banking rules. Manevich was attempting to do the same in St. Petersburg.

Russia's population continues to diminish as the result of deteriorating living standards, decline in the national health care service and alcoholism. In the past six months alone the country lost another quarter of a million souls. Over the past seven years a low birthrate combined with a high mortality rate has reduced the Russian population to 147 million. Unless conditions improve quickly, the population will fall by another 5 million by the year 2005.

From a subscriber. A country consisting of way too many gangsters and banksters is being converted into a raw materials horn of plenty for foreign interests, while its own people are pauperized, demoralized and degraded. Unless conditions improve quickly, the Russian people will have no other choice but to install a nationalist government to preserve the country's invaluable natural resources for the Russian people and prevent the siphoning off and export of national wealth by corrupt businessmen, currency speculators and banksters.

Middle East. From a subscriber. Christians of the Middle East are making an unprecedented exodus from the lands in which their spiritual soul brothers have lived since the time of Christ. At least 2 million are estimated to have left in the past five years, leaving only 12 million worshippers of Jesus in and around the lands of the Bible.

Israel. Although the U.S. government professes its disapproval of Israel's building new housing in Arab East Jerusalem, it continues to grant tax breaks to American citizens who privately fund the settlements. Even some Israelis resent this outside meddling. Referring to Irving Moskowitz, a big-bucks contributor from Miami Beach, an official of the liberal Meretz Party said, "He should go back to America. We don't want him to come here and dig our graves for us."

During Secretary of State Madeleine Albright's recent visit to Israel (a total waste of her time and our money) the media overflowed with scare stories about the kidnapping, supposedly by Islamic terrorists, of an Israeli, Yacov Schwartz. After Albright departed, Schwartz was run to earth. He was wearing an Arab headdress and carrying a psalm book. Yacov had kidnapped himself! He wanted to divert attention from any possible renewal of the peace process.

Benin. Despite the best efforts of abolitionists everywhere, black-on-black slavery continues in Africa. Children fetch from $20 to $80 a head. In Cotonou five people were arrested for trying to sell 90 young people as slaves in a cross-border operation.

South Africa. From a subscriber.

- The situation in the rural areas of the Orange Free State is becoming so serious that white farmers are afraid to leave their homes after sunset and even hesitate to attend church on Sundays.
- An average of 600 illegal black immigrants from the north are being arrested daily as they cross South Africa's borders on their way south.
- South Africa's provinces are heading for a disaster because the central government has not given them the means of reducing the number of civil servants and to cut their woefully bloated budgets.
- Tony Leon, leader of the Democratic Party, has called for the minority parties to join together to form a coalition to prevent the dominance of the overwhelmingly black African National Congress.

Latin America. From a subscriber. I lived many years in Latin America. The lower classes in this part of the world, mostly mestizo or Indian, do not expect to be treated as equals by their bosses and do not know how to react if they are. This doesn't mean they think they should be mistreated. They simply believe they occupy an inferior station in life and expect superiors to treat them accordingly. The difference in social status is made clear by the familiar and formal forms of speech. Maids do not address their employers as "tu," the familiar form, and would be fired if they did.

Arriving in the U.S. these Latinos immediately discover that their white boss or teacher has been taught to feel inferior, guilty, to bend over backwards to welcome Latino "diversity." Anyone familiar with these social differences realizes that treating a Latin social inferior as your equal invites disaster. Latinos immediately and correctly presume that you are a wimp ripe for the plucking. Such is the underclass we are clasping to our bosom.

Peru. Charging that an influential TV station has been spreading lies against the government, two minority stockholders took over its direction. Loud cries of censorship emanated from the majority shareholder, one Baruch Ivcher, an Israeli-born businessman, who was granted Peruvian citizenship in 1980 to get around the law that bans foreigners from holding a majority share in any media company. Ivcher's problem is that irregularities were found in his application for citizenship.

Australia. From a subscriber. An Aussie liberal acquaintance, when asked about the Asians pouring into Oz, blathered first about "hatred," then raptured about the willowy, dark, beautiful Asian girlfriends of his two blonde daughters. I told him Japanese beetles were pretty, too, with all those rainbow glints. Nevertheless I pick them off and dunk them in a can of kerosene because they kill my roses. My friend was horrified.

It's good to have a few liberal pals. Talking with them and listening to their logic is like giving yourself an ideological booster shot.

New Updated Edition

Because of inventory problems The Dispossessed Majority, updated in 1996, has only now been released for sale. Essentially the same book that has gone through nine printings, it contains hundreds of additions and corrections, including a major reworking of the chapter on Russia.

The handsome new hardcover book still costs only $25, plus $3 p&h.

To clear out the few remaining copies of the 1981 edition, they are offered at $4 each plus $3 p&h; $3 each for orders of six or more (p&h $2 per). Order from Howard Allen, Box 76, Cape Canaveral, FL 32920.

Stirrings

Irving's Latest Opus

The Kangaroo court of Nuremberg is still considered by anti-Nazi fanatics as a great step forward in international justice. Truth is, it was a judicial travesty, a brazen example of ex post facto jurisprudence which tried and convicted top-ranking Germans, not for war crimes as the media insisted, but for the "crime" of losing the war. When Hitler's star was in the ascendant and his word was law throughout most of Europe, he treated the fallen leaders of his enemies relatively gently. No world-class politicized trials, no mass execution of generals. Der Führer even allowed one of his archenemies, Léon Blum, the former French Premier and a Jew to boot, to spend the war in protective custody in rather comfortable circumstances. The Allied commanders were not so soft on the German high brass and political leaders at Nuremberg.

Trial Debunker Irving

The total unfairness of the Nuremberg Trials is reviewed in depth by David Irving's latest book, Nuremberg: The Last Battle. Death sentences were handed out by judges, some of whom were themselves guilty of the crimes charged against the defendants. Worse, the judges permitted the prosecution to present evidence obtained by torture.

No book gives a clearer picture of the gross illegalities that took place at Nuremberg. Irving also examined the shameful treatment of even the lowliest Germans after the war. Nuremberg: The Last Battle can be ordered from Noontide Press, Box 2739, Newport Beach, CA 92659. Price, $44, includes postage.

"Democratic" Germany Jails an American

Another book well worth a read is Jailed in "Democratic" Germany by Hans Schmidt, a German-born American citizen who returned to Deutschland last year to visit his ailing mother. As he was about to board a plane in Frankfurt to fly home to Florida, he was grabbed by the Gestapo-mimicking German police and locked up for five months. For the first few weeks he was virtually held incommunicado. Even his letters to his lawyer were opened and read by German snoops.

What horrible crime had Schmidt committed? He had written and sent newsletters both in German and English to friends and interested parties in Germany. His arrest demonstrates the almost totalitarian control exercised by the German government against disbelievers in one or more aspects of the Holocaust.

Schmidt had hoped that the U.S. government would try to protect an American citizen jailed illegally for "thought crimes." His hopes were dashed. Schmidt's fate was shared by another American citizen, Gerhard Lauck of Nebraska, now serving a four-year sentence for having mailed some newsletters to Germans that called the Holocaust into question. Lauck was nabbed when traveling in Denmark. The Danes then handed him over to the German thought police.

Schmidt's book is subtitled, "Ordeal of an American Writer." It delves deeply into the rottenness of the German criminal justice system and should destroy for all time any notion that the German government is truly democratic. The book may be ordered from Hans Schmidt, Box 11124, Pensacola, FL 32524, for $19.50, plus $3.50 postage and handling.

Out of Mexico Truth

Bradley R. Smith, one of the pluckiest of all Holocaust revisionists, is quite a guy. Wounded in the Korean War, he took advantage of the GI Bill to study art in Mexico. While there he became fascinated with bullfighting, actually became a novillero and traveled up and down the country as an apprentice toreador. Later he returned to the U.S. and founded the Committee for Open Debate on the Holocaust. No American has done more to implant doubt about the Six Million in the minds of college students, mainly through ads in college magazines and newspapers. The resulting publicity was enhanced by efforts, some of them successful, by Jewish students to ban all such advertising. At present Bradley is offering $50,000 to anyone who can persuade a national TV network to carry the very special 90-minute Video of the Century about Auschwitz.

For years Smith has fought his David against the Holocaust Goliath battle from San Diego. This summer he decided to return to Mexico, where he says he can carry on his work "more economically, more effectively and more efficiently." To anyone kind enough to help defray the expenses of his move southward, he offers a 2,800-word account of his experiences in the bullring, including two pictures of him in his toreador get-up. Smith's U.S. address is Box 3267, Visalia CA 93278. Subscription to his monthly Smith's Report is $25 a year.

Jews Lose One

AIPAC (American Israeli Public Affairs Committee) is a lobby for a foreign power that, till now, has managed to avoid registering as a foreign agent. Although it acts as a PAC, AIPAC is not required to list the names and addresses of its members and the amounts they contribute to political parties (most of it, natch, to Democrats). Ex-Representative Paul Findley (R-IL), along with some other citizens, is suing AIPAC in order to force it to perform as a honest lobby and no longer skirt the law. Earlier this year the Supreme Court ruled that a federal agency which allowed AIPAC to enjoy its unusual extralegal privileges had got it wrong. The case will now go back to the courts. Findley asserts he lost his race for the House in 1986 because of AIPAC's support of his Democratic rival. House members favoring U.S. neutrality in Middle Eastern affairs will now have a better shot at being re-elected once the contents of the stuffed wallets of AIPAC supporters are exposed.

Stirlets

- David Duke is back in the limelight. The Republican Executive Committee in St. Tammany Parish (LA) has elected him chairman by a 15-0 vote. Disgruntled mainstream Republicans call the St. Tammany Republicans a bunch of renegades.
- Better late than never. Ten years after his murder, the Dept. of Justice has offered a $1-million reward to the person or persons who provide information leading to the capture of the killer of Palestinian poet and activist Alex Odeh. So far no takers. In recent years Odeh's statue in California has been vandalized twice.
- Senator Slade Gorton (R-WA) has introduced a provision in the Interior Dept.'s fiscal 1998 budget that would slash federal funds for the 587 American Indian tribes. In the last fiscal year these subsidies (tribute) amounted to $787 million. Gorton is particularly miffed at the hefty government payments to Indian tribes whose gambling casinos are rolling in wealth. The Senator is also eager to kill the federal law that grants Indian tribes immunity from lawsuits.
